President Silent On Wage Decision

Declares Minimum Pay Laws Also Should Apply to Men.

By Robert C. Albright.

A bid for early termination of Judiciary hearings met a quick rebuff from court plan opponents yesterday as the Senate opposition scheduled 50 more witnesses against the program and advanced claims of added strength.

Negotiations to bring hearings to a close near mid-April came as opposition witnesses resumed testimony. A 32-year-old Harvard law professor and a white-haired farm co-operative executive denied existence of a "crisis" and advised submission of a constitutional amendment.

The suggestion for a "division of time" between witnesses for and against the bill, looking to possible end of hearings by April 17, was made by Chairman Henry F. Ashurst.

"We are willing to co-operate," Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, replied for the opposition. "But we have 50 more witnesses to present and it will take several weeks. Obviously, we cannot conclude by April 17."

The Nebraskan scoffed at Administration leadership claims of enough votes "in the bag" to pass the President's bill.

"So far as we are concerned, the danger point already is passed," he said. "My canvass of Senate strength, completed today, shows only 37 in the Senate the Administration can now positively count on for the bill. Our own committed strength stands at 42, and I think we will get about 10 of the 17 not yet committed. There is a good chance the present bill will not come to a vote in the Senate."

At the White House yesterday, President Roosevelt had no direct comment to make on the Supreme Court's decision upholding the Washington State law minimum wage law for women. But he did say he had said much about adequacy of State minimum wage legislation in the past and had not changed his mind. Recalling his previous position, some reporters construed this to mean he still regards State action on minimum wage problems inadequate.

President Roosevelt said State minimum wage laws should apply to men and children as well as women. He said he would ask the Attorney General whether in his opinion the court's ruling reinstated the District of Columbia's minimum wage law for women, held unconstitutional 14 years ago.

As Senate Judiciary hearings resumed, the Senate committee received a letter from Charles Elmore Cropley, clerk of the Supreme Court, whom it had queried on the state of the court docket. Cropley said promptness in handling cases had been increased by "modernizing and liberalizing" procedure.

Hearings Speeded.

In support of this point, tables were presented showing the condition of the court docket from 1925 to 1936. At the end of the October term of 1925 there were 438 cases remaining on the docket, compared with only 90 undetermined at the end of the 1936 term, one table revealed.

Other developments:

Resignation of Raymond B. Stevens from the Tariff Commission to "take an active part" in support of the President's court plan. In a letter to the President Stevens expressed confidence the plan will be adopted, and said "it should put an end to 'tortured constructions' of the Constitution that embody the 'economic predilections' of individual judges."

Testimony by Prof. Erwin N. Griswold, of Harvard, that the Constitution "is a thoroughly adequate document, entirely sufficient

Pot of Gold Found By Wood Chopper

Chester, S. C., March 30 (AP).—Tobin and Matthew Crank, colored brothers, brought an old iron kettle containing $8,500 in gold coins to a local bank today and Tobin explained he came upon the treasure while he was cutting wood.

He said his ax missed its mark and sank into the ground, causing a metallic sound. An investigation revealed the gold.

All the coins were American and some were dated 1856. One bearing an 1881 date eliminated belief the small fortune was buried when the Federal Army marched into the South during the Civil War.

The property belongs to the Crank estate and the money probably will be divided among seven members of the family.

Older residents recalled that the property once was owned by Littleton Land, reputedly wealthy, who died in 1885.

Administration Spokesman Also Attacks McReynolds as Lacking in the 'Good Sportsmanship' He Urged on President.

Text of Senator Robinson's Address—Page 6

Singling out two leading opponents of the President's judiciary program, Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson last night condemned what he called "ignorance or misrepresentation" of the court issue, then shot a parting blast at a member of the Supreme bench.

"Just what is good 'sportsmanship,' Mr. Justice," he said. "Nowhere in the Supreme Court decisions, nowhere in legal literature does a judge stand more emphatically condemned by his own test as a poor 'sportsman.'"

The McReynolds reference followed a verbal assault on the court plan opposition of Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, and Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho. Robinson quoted from a Senate speech made by the Idahoan seven years ago, in which he said "Amend the court!" The Senate leader said the Glass arguments against the court plan Monday night were "submerged and destroyed in the unreasonable bitterness of his expressions."

The attack on McReynolds referred to a recent speech by the justice at a local fraternity banquet, where McReynolds was quoted as saying it is not good sportsmanship for one who has had a fair trial to criticize a decison of the court.

Robinson recalled McReynolds' minority opinion in the gold clause decision, and declared the justice "struck in rage at his fellow mem-

New Wage Law Appears Likely In Washington

Enactment by Congress of a new minimum wage law for the District of Columbia appeared likely yesterday as President Roosevelt and Federal and municipal lawyers pondered the effect of Monday's ruling by the Supreme Court.

President Roosevelt indicated at his press conference that if a new law is needed here, he would throw his influence behind it.

At the same time, the President said a minimum wage law should apply to all—men as well as women and children. The old law applied only to women and minors.

Officials of the Central Labor Union estimated roughly that between 15,000 and 25,000 women and minors would be affected when a minimum wage law again becomes operative.

Seeks Interpretation.

President Roosevelt said he would ask Attorney General Cummings for an interpretation of the Supreme Court's action in declaring the case of Adkins vs. Children's Hospital "overruled." It was in this case, 14 years ago, that the court held the District minimum wage law unconstitutional.

Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal announced Monday, after the court had overruled the 1923 opinion, that he believed the law had been revived automatically. Yesterday, however, he was unable to say whether he would ask the Commissioners to appoint a new minimum wage board or recommend to them that they ask Congress for a new law.

Seal said he felt sure the Commissioners would ask Congress to pass a new bill at this session if a new law is required.

The possible fault in the old law,

Senate Passes $100,000,000 Insurance Plan

Accepted Without Record Vote; Bill Limited to Wheat.

The Administration's $100,000,000 crop insurance bill, fathered in the Senate by Senator James P. Pope (Democrat), Idaho, passed the Senate without a record vote yesterday.

The bill had been debated only sporadically since its appearance on the floor last week, as it principles long since had been approved by both Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, majority leader, and Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, minority leader. It goes now to the House, where speedy passage is predicted.

The measure authorizes the Government to insure the 1938 crop of wheat in the first move toward a broad program expected eventually to stabilize producers' incomes by insuring them against crop failures.

Limited to Wheat.

The bill, at the President's suggestion, was limited to wheat, with extension to other commodities to come when producers of other staples desire such programs and the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation has had experience in applying the principles to wheat.

The law is to operate by insuring normal wheat yields in regions where half or more of the farmers seek the insurance on an entirely voluntary basis. However, co-operation by the farmer in the Administration's other agricultural programs is stipulated before he can benefit from the insurance.

The bill, aimed at maintaining farm purchasing power on an even keel and to provide a stable supply of wheat for domestic consumption, dovetails with the "ever-

America Prepares—For Peace!

Mechanical Equipment Makes 'Microscopic' Army Powerful

U. S. Keeps Abreast of Advances in Military Equipment, But Lacks Proper Supply; CCC Seen as Potential Reserve.

By Edward T. Folliard.

The twentieth anniversary of America's entry into the World War—April 6—will find a heavily-armed Europe talking about the next war, while three nations seemingly rehearse for it in Spain. This is the third of a series of articles taking stock of America's own fighting forces.

A veteran of the World War, having spent the last 18 years in civilian life, would feel bewildered if he went back to the Army today. He would find himself in a world of "motorization" and "mechanization," and would discover that amazing advances have been made in the development of many types of weapons—the anti-aircraft gun, for example.

FOLLIARD.

The anti-aircraft gun of 1917-18 was just about the acme of inefficiency among war weapons. Occasionally one of them brought down a plane, but when it did the gunners wore the same look that "Lefty" Gomez' teammates register today when that hitless wonder smacks out a home run.

The anti-aircraft gun of 1937 is a different and far more deadly weapon. Four of them form a battery, and, hitched to motor trucks, they can be moved from place to place at a speed of 45 miles an hour. They are operated electrically from what is called a "director." As the officer stationed at this trains his tele-

Fee to Judge Is Charged in Sabath Fight

Rep. Kelly Tells House Chicago Bank Paid Jurist $35,000.

By the Associated Press.

The House heard Representative Kelly (Democrat), of Illinois, declare yesterday that John P. Barnes, of Chicago, "was sitting as a Federal judge and did receive a fee of $35,000 from the Chicago Title & Trust Co."

That unamplified statement was the high spot of a round of speeches focused on Representative Sabath (Democrat), of Illinois, and his chairmanship of a special House committee which investigated real estate bondholders' protective committees in the last Congress.

Representative Church (Republican), of Illinois, started three days of verbal tilts Thursday by accusing Sabath of dilatory tactics on legislation to protect bondholders. He read an editorial which mentioned a proposed $6,400 fee for Sabath's Chicago law firm in connection with a real estate reorganization case.

Took Case Previously.

Firing back at Church today, Representative O'Malley (Democrat), of Wisconsin, said the Sabath firm had taken the case two years before the investigating committee, of which he is a member, was established.

He said Judge Barnes would not approve the $6,400. The courts later said $2,500 was a reasonable fee.

Kelly interrupted then with the remark about the $35,000 fee for Barnes.

The House committee knew about it, O'Malley asserted.

He said the Chicago Title & Trust Co. had handled many real estate reorganizations in Chicago, most of which "find their way before certain Federal judges."

Church, he said, represents an Illinois "silk stocking and Gold Coast district." He added:

Backed by Dirksen.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), Illinois, also went to Sabath's support. He said Sabath was a man of "unimpeachable integrity" and deplored Church's criticism as "lamentable."

At a morning hearing before the House Judiciary Committee, Sabath had urged action on his bill to create a Federal conservator for real estate reorganizations as a means of guarding bondholders' interests.

He said even some judges conceded a "racket" exists in courts handling reorganization cases.

"Judges handling the cases," Sabath asserted, "are appointing their friends and hangers-on in the courts and professional receivers in whom we can have no confidence."

Indian Locked Up After Threatening To Scalp Two Men

Whether it was anger or intoxication which caused Lawrence Frank Williams, full-blooded Indian and son of a Mohawk chief, to threaten to scalp two men in a basement at 1927 First street southwest, was being investigated last night.

Regardless of the reason, his rampage was brought to an abrupt close by a well-aimed lamp from the hand of Woodrow Clemmons yesterday morning.

Clemmons said he was in bed in the room with Don Brozille when Williams chopped his way through the door with an ax and warwhooped:

"Get up. I'm going to scalp you both."

Then Clemmons threw the lamp. Williams was taken to Gallinger Hospital for treatment of cuts on the head and a black eye. He was then locked up in the Fourth Precinct.

His explanation was that he had been drinking with the two men and had left to chop some wood. When he returned to the house with the hatchet, he said, Clemmons hurled the light.

Man Held in Fatal Shooting of Father

Troy, N. Y., March 30 (AP).—Arrested after a gun fight in which two State troopers were wounded, John Ireland, 40, was held today on a first-degree murder charge for the shotgun killing of his 78-year-old father, Edward Ireland, former auctioneer.

The charge was preferred by Inspector Edward O. Hageman, of the State police, who said the prisoner had thrown his mother downstairs, shot his father and then exchanged shots with troopers who were called to the Ireland home at Latham, a suburb.

Ireland, a World War veteran, was said by State Police Sergt. A. W. Wheeler to have been an inmate of the Hudson River State Hospital for the Insane on two occasions.

Japanese Ruler Orders Election

Rebels Slay Hundreds to Halt Mutiny

By the Associated Press.

Bayonne, France, March 30.—A purge of insurgents who revolted against Italian influence in the civil war has caused many deaths and still is continuing, Basque reports from northern Spain said tonight.

At the same time, insurgents massing for an offensive on the northern Asturian front said government troops there were weakened by mutiny and anarchy. One hundred and fifty rebellious militiamen were executed for insubordination, government deserters said.

Italian and other foreign soldiers with the insurgents never were popular with much of the army, the Basque dispatches recounted—and when insurgent armies, including Italian soldiers, suffered defeat on the Guadalajara front this feeling was said to have been intensified.

Plots to end the Italian participation in the civil war were uncovered and several scores were executed, the Basque advices said. It was reported the movements were directed merely against foreign activity in the struggle and not against Gen. Franco, insurgent commander in chief.

(A Gibraltar dispatch said revolt had broken out within the insurgent ranks in southern Spain and in Spanish Morocco, resulting in many executions. This account indicated the uprising was directed against the insurgent commanders.)

Insurgent sources in France met the reports of disaffection with the statement:

"We are in close contact with all nationalist (insurgent) Spain and we have no such information. These reports are fantastic."

Report Protest Suicides.

Reliable informants declared—regardless of the truth or falsity of the assertions of executions and plots—that the role the Italians have played in the war has created serious dissatisfaction among the Spanish insurgents.

Two Spanish insurgent colonels were reported to have killed themselves at Burgos as an expression of protest against what they called "the foreign invasion."

But travelers to Gibraltar said more than 500 officers and men at Tetuan had turned against the insurgent command there. Thirty officers and men were executed to suppress the uprising, according to advices from Tangier, international zone in Morocco.

Reports from insurgent Algeciras said that 50 conspirators within Gen. Franco's regime and 200 government prisoners had been shot last week-end to quell revolts in southern Algeciras, La Linea and San Roque.

There was said to be little feeling against Germans fighting in the insurgent armies. Their numbers are less.

The French dispatch boat Aisne, which has been assigned to Bayonne to assure protection of French waters near Spain, made a tour as far as San Sebastian on the lookout for any further attacks on vessels such as that on the Spanish government freighter Mar Caspio. (The ship was abandoned off Bayonne last night after insurgent gunboats forced her aground.)

In Spanish quarters the Aisne's

The accident occurred at the Capitol Overlook curve on Mount Vernon boulevard. Both were taken to Emergency Hospital, where Boone was pronounced dead and th girl died a few minutes later. Huguley was held by Park police.

He was crossing H street in the 600 block northeast when he was struck by a Capital Transit streetcar operated by Daniel M. Crockett, 63, of Capital Heights, Md.

Woman, 114, Saved In Almshouse Fire

New Lisbon, N. J., March 30 (U.P.). Inmates of the ancient Burlington County Almshouse, including 114-year-old Mary Ann Asay, were led or carried to safety early today when fire swept the main building, causing damage estimated at $200,000.

Attendants helped 139 patients, 40 of them bedridden, to leave the 132-year-old structure shortly after the fire started.

Miss Asay, known as "Aunt Mary," says she was born in Philadelphia, February 19, 1823.

Lord, Lady Tweedsmuir Given Royal Welcome to Washington

By Sidney Olson.

Perhaps because His Excellency, the Righ Honorable Lord Tweedsmuir, G. C. M. G., C. H., is an unassuming man, the top hats and the cutaway coats and the measured punctilio of his welcome to Washington seemed exactly right and proper.

The visit to this country of the King's viceroy to Canada is no simple affair to be handled by sending whoever is free at the State Department down to meet the train. For John Buchan, as the novelist was known before his ascension to this post, is the representative on this continent of the King of England, exercising the royal perogatives and being received with royal honors.

So Secretary of State Cordell Hull and a picked staff of State Department officials, the Canadian Minister to Washington and Lady Marler, Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador; Marvin McIntyre, the President's secretary, and the Army and the Navy and the Marines, all with fresh-scrubbed faces and in their choicest regalia, went down to meet the train.

On the heels of the historian-poet-critic-novelist-biographer-governor general followed Lady Tweedsmuir, blonde and smiling, in a brown wool suit trimmed in cross fox; and two military aides, one wearing the towering bearskin shako and kilts of the Royal Scots Guard, and the other in the gold-spiked white tropical helmet and scarlet coat of

'Model' Youth Admits Slaying Girl in Buffalo

Other Crimes Are Confessed by Boy, 18, Seized on Way From Church.

By the Associated Press.

Buffalo, N. Y., March 30.—A "good boy" who was arrested on his way home from church confessed today, Police Commissioner James W. Higgins announced, that he was the slayer of his 18-year-old neighbor, Mary Ellen Babcock.

Higgins also said the prisoner, Thomas Smith, 18, confessed to having stabbed 14-year-old Frances Fitzgerald, of Buffalo, with an ice pick in an automobile Sunday night. Her physician reported that her condition was "fair" tonight.

Former honor student in high school, Smith was called by his mother and brother a "good, clean-cut lad, who never drank or smoked and didn't go out to parties or dances." His father is dead.

Signs Confession.

"Tonight District Attorney Walter C. Newcomb filed a charge of first degree murder against Smith at the South Park avenue police station and announced he probably would be arraigned tomorrow. Newcomb said Smith had signed a 22-page statement."

He also said Smith had confessed to two sex crimes against girls.

Smith attended Canisius College for a brief period, but left and began peddling newspapers.

He lives within a few blocks of the South Buffalo field where the body of Mary Ellen Babcock, attractive daughter of a railroad man, was found February 6.

Her body was battered and stabbed, and her clothing torn. Her fingernails held flesh and human hair, evidence, police said, of a struggle with her assailant.

She had not been assaulted however, nor had Frances Fitzgerald, who, Commissioner Higgins reported, was stabbed in the back as she tried to help Smith start his automobile Sunday night.

Higgins said investigation into the Fitzgerald stabbing led to the arrest of Smith as he left a special Monday service in a neighborhood church.

"He told us," Commissioner Higgins said, "that sometimes something seemed to 'click' in his brain.

"When that happened, he would want to attack and maim. But then, suddenly, something would 'click' again, and the impulse would be gone."

One of the arresting officers,

Maniac Killed Model, Mother, Doctor Suggests

Abnormal Assault Hinted; Fingerprints, Address Book Studied.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 30.—Police announced late today they had developed fingerprints in the apartment where a pretty artist's model and two other persons were slain Sunday morning.

The prints were found on the sheets of the bed where the body of the model, Veronica Gedeon, was found, investigators said.

At the same time they announced they were seeking for questioning a former appraiser for the Home Owners Loan Corporation. They said the appraiser had pleaded guilty a year ago to extorting valuable jewelry from Miss Gedeon's mother in return for a favorable report on her property when she applied for a loan.

A general alarm was sent out for James Fitton, 35, who was named by Assistant Chief Inspectors Kear and John J. Lyons as the appraiser who had threatened to "get even."

Lyons said:

"Mrs. Gedeon testified against Fitton when the case was before the Federal grand jury. We also have learned that previous to his having been indicted he had shown marked attention to Veronica and had asked her to take various trips around the country with him. Miss Gedeon refused and their friendship ceased when he attempted to shake down her mother.

"He pleaded guilty to the charge September 23, 1935, and was sent to the Federal House of Detention for 90 days by Federal Judge T. Blake Kennedy."

Every intimate detail of Veronica's career as an art model by day and a butterfly by night was studied by the police.

They heard without comment a theory that a "frustrated Boston millionaire" had hired a professional killer to strike down the vivacious model, whose nude body was found along with those of her mother and a roomer in their Beekman Hill apartment Easter Sunday.

Drys' Attorney Lauds Repeal, Terms Prohibition a Failure

Conditions are better under repeal than they were under national prohibition, Edward B. Dunnington, attorney for the National Antisaloon League, told a mass meeting in First Baptist Church, Alexandria, last night.

"We have an improvement in the twenty-first amendment, but we did not realize it," declared Dunnington.

"We were unable to enforce the eighteenth amendment.

"The twenty-first amendment has returned the question of regulation back to the State and gives back its police power, and is a law that can be enforced and observed."

"It gives back to the Federal Government those powers properly belonging to it.

"We should profit by the experience with the eighteenth amendment.

"Before prohibition," said Dunnington, "we had saloons where women were barred. Now we have inns where women are allowed as well as men and where drinks are sold by women instead of men, as under the old conditions.

"It is a question of continued agitation and education."

The Rev. John Randolph Hobbs, newly elected president of the National Antisaloon League, who was to have spoken, could not be present because of illness.

Edward J. Richardson, of Richmond, superintendent of the Virginia Antisaloon League, made a brief address.

$6,149,119 in Extra Taxes Held Likely

Collins Will Offer Nine Revenue Bills to Meet Deficit.

Budget Summary.

House Appropriations Committee reports $45,228,000 supply bill for District.

Nine proposals for new taxes to meet $6,149,000 deficit will be introduced later. Bill forbids increase in realty rate.

Supplementary report on nepotism reveals 3,000 of the District's 10,617 employes are related to one or more persons in the service.

Health Department estimates were increased by $67,020 and the transfer of administration of municipal hospitals from the Board of Public Welfare to the Health Department proposed.

Bill provides 25 additional policemen, one stenographer and six chauffeurs but fails to provide for new headquarters building.

Jacobs Report Disregarded.

By James D. Secrest.

Repudiating the three-point Jacobs fiscal relations formula, the House Appropriations Committee yesterday recommended a restoration of the $5,000,000 Federal lump sum payment, additional District taxes, surveys of municipal administration and the water system, sweeping inter-departmental transfers and increased funds for public health.

Altogether the District supply bill for the next fiscal year carries $45,228,024 in appropriations, which is $1,515,114 more than was provided last year, but $1,292,761 less than recommended by the Budget Bureau.

Even with this reduction, obtained chiefly by departmental economies, the District is faced with the problem of raising $6,149,119 by additional taxation to balance its 1938 budget.

Later this week Chairman Ross Collins, of the District appropriations sub-committee, will introduce nine tax bills to broaden the local tax base. These bills, if enacted into law, he said, will more than meet the anticipated deficit.

Opposes Realty Tax Rise.

The committee specifically directs, however, that the $1.50 realty tax be not raised by the Commissioners, and Collins predicted that if the new taxes are adopted the realty rate may be reduced.

Other major recommendations of the Collins sub-committee as reported to the House are that:

The Public Utilities Commission be directed to conduct an inquiry into the rates of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.

The Pennsylvania avenue bridge be repaired instead of replaced because of the "prohibitive" cost of the latter proposal.

The department of vehicles and traffic and the division of trees and parkings be financed by the gasoline tax fund rather than general revenue.

All school playgrounds be under the direction of the Community Center instead of the playground department, even during vacation periods.

The Receiving Home for Children be abolished.

A bonding commissioner's office be established under direction of the corporation counsel and be authorized to take fees now collected by private lenders.

An insurance rate expert be employed with the view of reducing rates in the District.

Administration costs of the Public Assistance Division be reduced and its accounts hereafter be audited by the District auditor's office.

Per diem employes be paid only for work done and, consequently, not on holidays as are those on the annual rolls.

The schools be allowed 54 additional teachers and the Metropolitan Police Department 25 additional policemen.

Fight Appears On Plan to Cut Farm Tenancy

House Group May Approve Bill Today; President Advises Caution.

Indication of a difference of opinion over the scope Federal legislation on farm tenancy should have appeared yesterday. President Roosevelt said the purchasing of land for tenants should be on a cautious experimental basis, and Chairman Marvin Jones, of the House Agriculture Committee, said that group may approve his $195,000,000 tenancy relief bill today.

The President yesterday conferred with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama; Dr. W. W. Alexander, Resettlement Administrator, and Jones on the farm tenancy legislation. Later he told his press conference Federal action on the subject should be on an experimental basis, with funds spread very thin, and the action should not necessarily be a permanent step.

Mentioning the $50,000,000 annually provided in the Jones bill for the purchase of land to be resold to tenant farmers, he said his special committee on tenancy might prefer to keep it down to a much smaller amount in the experimental stages.

He avoided taking sides in the dispute over when the land purchased by the Government should be turned over to the tenant-purchasers. The special committee favors the Government retaining title for 20 years to prevent the purchaser from losing his land and again becoming a tenant. Some members of Congress favor giving the tenant a deed as soon as he has paid 50 per cent of the purchase price.

The President said it was immaterial to him which course is followed so long as there is protection against overspeculation in land.

New Faces in Congress

REPRESENTATIVE JAMES C. OLIVER.

Former Football and Scholastic Star Won Victory in Ultra-Conservative New England District Despite 'Radical' Convictions.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

For four years in college James Churchill Oliver played football and still managed to come off at the finish with scholastic colors flying over a Phi Beta Kappa key. A rare feat, certainly. But no rarer than the one he accomplished in 1936 when, running on the Republican ticket, he spent a good deal of time organizing Townsend camps, declared himself a staunch defender of liberal principles, and came to Congress by a big majority from the Pine Tree State's ultra-conservative First District.

As Oliver sees it, Townsend tenets are hand in glove with progress. "The plan is at least a gesture in the right direction," he said. "It's a symbol of a way to distribute purchasing power, and this is certainly one road to economic recovery."

Monetary reform that would bring into play a larger percentage of America's potential wealth would help too, he believes. This, in fact, is one of his pet theories, as well as his chief current interest. He is also much concerned with the proposed Supreme Court change. Stands strongly against the President on it; is in sympathy with Senator Burton K. Wheeler's proposed constitutional amendment that would give Congress power to override Supreme Court decisions on validity of laws, after an intervening election.

Distinguished-looking, genial and scholarly, Oliver was born 41 years ago in South Portland, Me. Attended Bowdoin College. Was classmate, fraternity brother, and roommate of another "Bowdoin boy" who made good in politics—Edward C. Morse, jr., former Maine Congressman, who recently was appointed to the Maritime Commission.

Soon after he finished college in 1917, Oliver enlisted in the U. S. Army as a private. Came out, after the war, a major of infantry. Went into general insurance business. Is married and has a 12-year-old son—J. Scott Oliver.

normal granary" which Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace desires. It is not a definite part of the program, the bill's supporters pointed out, but could act harmoniously with it.

The only attacks on the measure came from Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, an opponent of the New Deal in matters of regulatory legislation, who called the bill "a step to State socialism," and from Senator Francis T. Maloney (Democrat), Connecticut, who raised the point that such a plan might compete with private institutions.

Pope answered by showing that all private plans have failed to meet the situation. In explaining the bill he pointed out that the board of the corporation, to consist of three directors to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, will determine the percentage of insurance coverage on the basis of the average yield of wheat on individual farms, and then require a minimum amount of participation in a community before granting the insurance. Premiums shall be fixed for such insurance payable in wheat or cash equivalent.

The Senate's next order of business will be the new Guffey Coal bill, on which Senator Joseph Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, will address the Senate today.

'Top' Democrats On Whisky Trust Pay Roll, Charge

By the United Press.

Charges that a whisky trust is hiring top-flight Democratic politicians at fat salaries in order to influence the Administration and, if possible, President Roosevelt, were made on the House floor yesterday by Representative Claude E. Fuller (Democrat), Arkansas.

He pointed out that W. Forbes Morgan, distant relative of the President, resigned as treasurer of the Democratic National Committee to become president of the Distilled Spirits Institute at a "guaranteed salary of $500,000 for the next five years."

James H. Doran, former prohibition administrator, is paid $30,000 annually by the institute, and "to the great satisfaction of the liquor and bottle trust," Fuller said. He added that Grover Whalen, prominent New York Democrat, received $75,000 annually as chairman of the board of a distilling company, for which salary he probably only is used for window dressing and for political influence in obtaining special favors."

"Mr. Morgan is not experienced in the liquor business and everyone knows that he was guaranteed this unreasonable and outrageous salary in order to obtain his influence with the Democratic Administration and, if possible, the President," Fuller roared. "The American people will now be educated by the whisky trust."

Hush-Hush or Health?

Washington Votes for Health, Joins Venereal Disease Drive

By Gerald G. Gross.

Hush-hush or health?

Washington has cast its ballot for the latter, as evidenced by developments of the last three weeks, climaxed yesterday by the reporting of a District appropriations bill which provides not only a health center but substantial increases for venereal disease control work.

The measure approved by the Collins committee gives the health department an additional $11,330 for its contagious disease division, part of which will be allotted to syphilis and gonorrhea abatement.

Hiring of more public health nurses to bolster the present overworked staff which comes in contact daily with hundreds of cases of venereal and other preventable diseases in the home will be made possible by the $23,040 fund increase.

Laboratories Aided.

The department's laboratories, vitally important in the crusade against the so-called social disease, receives a much-needed boost of $3,590, and $27,060 has been added for medical, hygiene and sanitation service in the schools, whose syphilis-gonorrhea problem is a serious one.

An item of $16,880 will permit the employment of four food inspectors and six auxiliary employes to operate a food inspection service, covering all public establishments selling or serving food.

Altogether, the expanded service provided for in the bill, now ready for consideration by the House, can be expected to assist appreciably in reducing the Capital's abnormally high mortality and morbidity rates from venereal diseases.

More Progress Made.

However, progress has been made on more than just this one front. Without intending to imply that the current series, of which this is the final article, was responsible for the salutary shakeup which has occurred, a few developments since these stories were launched March 8 may be mentioned:

More housewives than ever before (an official statement) are requesting that maids, cooks, &c., sent to them by the C. Public Employment Center first have had blood tests for syphilis. The center, in co-operation with the Health Department, is now working on a plan whereby all applicants for domestic jobs may be thoroughly examined for syphilis, gonorrhea and tuberculosis before being certified to the employer.

Fifteen thousand names of domestic workers—colored and white, male and female—are registered with the center, which is located at 480 Indiana avenue northwest. Medical certification and proper follow-up of those in need of treatment is a gigantic undertaking, but officials hope to formulate a program which will benefit the employer, the employe and the community.

In the last few weeks attendance at the social hygiene clinic at 512 I street northwest has shown marked increase. This is reflected by the rapidly mounting burden of the Health Department's serological laboratory, which is now making almost 50,000 blood and "smear" tests annually.

It was learned yesterday that the vastly increased volume of work may result in blood Wassermanns and "smears" being made on four days a week each, instead of two as at present, with the two types of diagnostic work overlapping one or two days a week.

A large number of persons who wrote or telephoned wanting to know where they might obtain treatment were referred to the District Medical Society, the Health Department or the Central Admitting Bureau for Hospitals.

Campaign Commended.

Citizens' associations have adopted resolutions commending the venereal disease campaign, the Ministerial Union of Washington has done likewise and a mixed group of undergraduates at American University has listened to an address on syphilis.

Private physicians have reported intense interest in the campaign among their patients and members of the Senate and House personally have expressed their willingness to do all they can to combat the scourge locally and nationally.

Concluding this series is the following article on congenital syphilis which has been contributed by a well-known Washington pediatrician. He writes:

How may one be certain or even suspicious of infection in the infant? In the first place, the baby may be born entirely free of symptoms and the disease be found during a routine examination for some other illness. The symptoms may be present at six months, one year, or even be delayed until the child is 6 or even 12 years of age. In these may be the first sign. On the other hand, the gradual onset of headache cases notching of the front teeth may be the beginning of brain lesions resulting in mental disease.

The more common symptoms of the disease appear in early infancy, before one year. These symptoms are: Eruptions, occurring usually about the rectum and genitalia or frequently on the arms and legs. Sniffles, which resemble a common cold, but are persistent despite all manner of treatment, with a large amount of mucus in the nose and throat. Pain, due to infection of the bones of the arms and legs. This is easily seen on X-ray examination and is a quick and simple method of diagnosis. Malnutrition, failure to gain weight and strength with anemia, pot belly, soft flabby muscles and poor appetite.

These symptoms and many others known to the physician are prevented easily. A blood test at the beginning of pregnancy is all that is required, followed by treatment in positive cases. Under proper treatment there is no reason for a baby to be born with a disease which is so easily prevented but more difficult to cure. It is a simple matter to make a test for syphilis and should be made in all pregnancies.

The treatment of inflected babies and children is relatively simple. Acute symptoms such as rash, sniffles, pain, etc, can be cleared up almost magically by a few injections and even by using some of the newer medications by mouth. Final cure of the disease, however, is more difficult and prolonged.

Complete cure is possible in a large majority of cases and further symptoms need not be seen. These children cured of the disease grow up to be strong and healthy and able to have children of their own free of the disease. If neglected, on the other hand, they later become ill, frequently in hospitals and mental institutions for long periods of time.

Employer Shot After Quarrel; Typist Is Held

In an argument over back wages with his 19-year-old blonde stenographer, John S. McCauley, 32, operator of a Washington transfer company, was shot yesterday afternoon in his offices at 1762 Columbia road northwest.

Police last night were holding the stenographer, Irene Tadlock, of Briceville, Tenn., after she made a statement to detectives saying McCauley struck her.

McCauley was in Garfield Hospital. A .32-caliber bullet shattered the bone in his right arm, but physicians said the wound was not expected to prove serious.

The girl, who said she came to the Capital recently from Tennessee, told police she worked as McCauley's stenographer during the day and took care of his baby at night in the McCauley home at the Columbia road address.

She said, according to detectives, that McCauley owed her salary for two of the three weeks she has been employed by him. Yesterday she asked him for the money. His reply, according to her statement to police, was a blow.

Police Women's Bureau matrons took the girl to Gallinger Hospital last night for treatment of bruises on the jaw and arm. She was to be returned to the hospital today for X-ray examination.

Irene ran after the shooting, darting out of the back of the building. Police, who arrived on the scene shortly after the shot was fired, chased her up and down streets of the neighborhood and through several apartment buildings before she was captured by Precinct Detective R. L. (Buck) Jones.

Housewives, children and storekeepers, attracted by the excitement, crowded the vicinity of Columbia and Ontario roads while Jones waited with his young prisoner for the Tenth Precinct patrol.

The girl talked freely with police and reporters. She told reporters who she was and gave them the name of the man police say she shot.

"You would have done the same thing if you had been me," she said.

The gun from which the shot was fired was an old-fashioned, short-barrel, nickel-plated revolver.

The girl said it belonged to McCauley. The gun and shells were seized by police, but no charges were placed against her.

'Model' Youth Admits Slaying Girl in Buffalo

Other Crimes Are Confessed by Boy, 18, Seized on Way From Church.

Lieut. William E. Downey, said that while Smith was being questioned about the Fitzgerald case he suddenly was asked:

"What about the Babcock girl—where did you meet her?"

Downey said Smith blurted out: "I've got to get this whole thing off my mind. I killed Mary Ellen Babcock, all right.

"I never saw her until that night I passed her in Legion Drive and the urge came over me to go after her. I grabbed her from behind, and when she started to scream I put my hand over her face.

"I dragged her across the road and threw her down the bank. I continued to stab her. I picked up a rock and smashed her in the head."

Mary Ellen's body was found next day. She had been missing since she started to walk home alone from a wake.

of the household some time ago because he felt his wife was not exercising the proper restraint on their pleasure-loving daughter.

"I don't know his name, simply that he came from Boston," Gedeon told reporters. "He offered 'Ronnie' an automobile, house and money to have an affair with him, but she turned him down. I believe his frustration caused it."

The homicide squad, which solved the nearby Nancy Evans Titterton murder a year ago despite a similar scarcity of clews, centered its attention on a loose-leaf address book found in the slain model's apartment.

Using this as an index, the detectives set out to reconstruct what her father termed a "wild and willful" career—(" 'Ronnie,' made fools of lots of men," he said).

Of the 150 persons whose names were listed in the book, Detective Lieut. Walter Harding said at least three were questioned during the day. Two of them he described as professional models, friends of the dead beauty, and one as an illustrator for whom she had posed.

Investigators said the names, addresses and office hours of several physicians were found in the book, along with those of artists, models and other acquaintances.

Some of the notations were made in the handwriting of "Ronnie's" attractive middle-aged mother, who was said by investigators to have operated a speakeasy in the neighborhood during prohibition.

After a thorough examination, Acting Chief Medical Examiner Thomas A. Gonzales said there were indications both women had been subjected to an abnormal assault.

Autopsy findings showed the model had been drinking heavily before she arrived home at 3 a. m. Easter morning, and, apparently, encountered the murderer who earlier had throttled her mother, Mary Gedeon, and stabbed to death Frank Byrnes, the English waiter who occupied a room in the five-room apartment.

Gonzales, announcing his findings, said:

"I cannot state with absolute certainty that either of the women was criminally attacked."

The medical examiner pointed out "it is extremely difficult to make a positive determination of a criminal attack with women who have been married."

In the elaborately equipped police laboratory, technicians continued their study of a strand of gray hair and a few bits of flesh pared from beneath one of the victim's fingernails. They were the only tangible clews that have been made public.

Georges (Frenchy) Gueret, unemployed chauffeur who formerly roomed with the Gedeons, was released from custody this afternoon after more than 32 hours of questioning.

"I know nothing about the murders," he said.

Echoing Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine's remark that it was "a tough case," Deputy Chief Inspector Francis J. Kear said:

"We definitely have no suspects."

Motor Strike Conferees Call 2-Day Recess

Proposal to End Chrysler Deadlock Hinted in Adjournment.

By the Associated Press.

Lansing, Mich., March 30.—Gov. Frank Murphy's conference seeking settlement of the Chrysler automobile strike adjourned late today until 11 a. m. Friday. Neither Walter P. Chrysler, heading the corporation's negotiators, nor representatives of the United Automobile Workers of America, would comment.

When the conference resumes, it is expected that John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, who now is engaged in coal wage negotiations at New York, will rejoin it.

Murphy said the meeting was recessed because Chrysler was called to New York on urgent corporation business. He said Chrysler would return either Friday or Saturday.

"The chances are bright for a settlement not long after we reconvene," Murphy said.

Adjournment was interpreted in some quarters as indicating the conferees had settled on a tentative proposal concerning the extent of collective bargaining recognition to be accorded the U. A. W. A. and that approval of the C. I. O. head was desired before an agreement was concluded.

Reo Strike Continues.

Attempts to settle the 20-day sit-down strike affecting 2,200 workers of the Reo Motor Car Co.'s truck factory here centered today in a two-man committee. Mayor Max A. Templeton, who has been aiding in attempts to end the strike, had announced early Sunday that an agreement was imminent, only to have a larger group of conferees adjourn until today without a settlement.

After a brief session in Templeton's office today, the mayor announced both sides expressed belief a speedier settlement might be reached by a two-man board. E. F. Keller, superintendent in charge of operations at the Reo factory, and Allan S. Haywood, C. I. O. representative, will confer, calling in associates when a definite proposal is ready for consideration.

Gov. Murphy has indicated he believed an agreement in the Chrysler dispute, which would send 60,000 Chrysler workers and some 20,000 in allied industries back to work, might be followed rapidly by settlement of the Reo strike and of the sit-down in the Hudson Motor Car Co. plant at Detroit, which has thrown more than 10,000 out of work.

The Senate of the Michigan Legislature today approved and made eligible for a vote Wednesday three bills dealing with sit-down strikers. One would make it a felony to take unlawful possession of industrial property or interference with its use by the owner; another would make negotiations between labor and management mandatory prior to any strike or lockout, and the third would make it a felony for any persons to negotiate with striking workers while they occupied an industrial plant. Each provides maximum penalties for violation of five years' imprisonment and $2,500 fine.

U. M. W. Makes Concessions.

New York, March 30 (AP).—The United Mine Workers, negotiating a new wage contract with the soft coal operators, have withdrawn all their demands excepting their demand for higher pay.

This was learned tonight from an undisputably reliable source.

The miners' concessions led observers to believe an agreement could be reached tomorrow and the strike threatened for April 1 could be averted.

Blaze Threatening Forrestville Radio Station Laid to Firebug

Seven Volunteer Fire Companies in Prince Georges Prevent $40,000 Loss in Experimental Equipment; Incendiarism Inquiry Urged.

Fire driven by high winds across a 125-acre tract threatened yesterday afternoon to destroy $40,000 worth of radio equipment at a Bureau of Standards experimental station near Forestville, Md., about 5 miles from the District line.

The blaze was the last of a series of seven that sprang up in widely separated sections of Prince Georges County and led county fire officials to request C. F. Winslow, the State fire warden at Laurel, to begin an investigation of incendiarism.

Seven volunteer fire companies in the county, including those at Forestville, Camp Spring and Marlboro, were sent to the experimental station before the blaze was brought under control.

The station, located about a mile from the Marlboro Pike, houses in three frame, one-story buildings radio receiving equipment used by the Bureau of Standards in tests. S. S. Kerby, the station superintendent, placed its value at $40,000.

The fire was discovered in a strip of woods by Henry Wedding, 12, son of the caretaker, Harry Wedding, about 2:30 p. m.

Before the first fire companies were able to reach the scene the flames had swept close to the buildings. The fire companies drawing water from wells put out the blaze after a 2½-hour fight.

Earlier in the day brush fires had been extinguished at Edmonston, Glen Arden, Ardmore, Lanahan, Beaver Heights and Dodge Park.

Blow on Head KilledDollman, Doctor Asserts

Plea of Read Defense for Continuance Denied; Jury Selected.

By the Associated Press.

Sutton, W. Va., March 30.—Dr. J. C. Eakle told a jury today in the murder trial of William B. Read that a blow on the head "undoubtedly" caused the death of W. Earle Dollman, whose body was found in his burning automobile last Thanksgiving.

His testimony came after Dollman's father, the 24-year-old fiancee of the slain man and his younger brother identified the charred remnants of clothing and keepsakes which State troopers said they took from the automobile.

Lieut. James Fillinger, of the State police, has said Lawrence Gingell, who is awaiting trial in the same case, told him Read struck Dollman on the head during a quarrel. The officer added that War Joseph Kirby, also awaiting trial, and Gingell told him Dollman offered to take them to a nearby gasoline station after their car ran out of fuel. During the ride there, Fillinger quoted Gingell's statement, the 25-year-old Baltimore man quarreled with Dollman.

Eakle said he examined the body a few hours after R. D. Gum and J. D. Gibson extinguished the blaze. He described the head wound, and Prosecutor Charles Duffield, jr., asked if it could cause death.

Eakle replied:

"Without a doubt it did."

A jury qualified to return the death penalty was chosen shortly before noon recess after Judge Jake Fisher overruled a defense motion for continuance so that alibi witnesses could be summoned.

Miss Marion Whitehurst, of Charleston, financee of the salesman, was the last witness of the day. She was taken by State police to a nearby garage to see the burned automobile, then came back to the witness stand and identified a pair of pajamas as the ones she had given Dollman on his birthday a few weeks before he was slain.

In a low voice, she told of receiving a long distance telephone call from Dollman Thanksgiving eve from Gassaway. He was on his way home, she said, and told her to "be ready when I arrive and we'll get to that party."

Shortly after midnight, Gum and his wife found the blazing automobile. He and Gibson were the State's first witnesses.

Gingell, former Kensington, Md., caddy and Kirby, formerly of Scranton, will be tried separately this week. Both pleaded guilty in Kanawha County to the abduction and robbery of P. P. Wilson and to holding up Harold Casto, service station attendant. Read will be tried on that count April 8.

trip was interpreted as a demonstration to the insurgents of French alertness, but officials refused to confirm this.

An indication that the insurgents had tightened their control of the frontier was seen in the failure of most Spanish newspapers to arrive here.

Huge Guns Mounted.

Gibraltar, March 30 (AP).—Spanish insurgents tonight mounted four huge German-made guns on the seacoast between Algeciras and Tarifa, in the heart of an area where mass executions were reported to have been carried out against revolters within Gen. Franco's insurgent ranks. Insurgent gunners manned the great coastal pieces, which pointed out across the straits and toward the Rock of Gibraltar.

(The significance of the guns was not immediately explained, but they were perhaps emplaced to repel any counter-revolt from Spanish Morocco, across the straits.

Loyalists Advance.

Madrid, March 30 (AP).—Government troops, in a series of sudden and powerful thrusts, continued to advance their positions today on the west side of the Aragon highway in the Guadalajara sector—north from Madrid.

Spanish government forces tonight routed the insurgent drive toward the rich coal and mercury mines of Ciudad Real Province.

They captured the insurgent strongholds of Alcaracejos and Villanueva del Duque in what dispatches from Cordoba to Madrid described as a major insurgent defeat.

The government success came after four days of bitter fighting. Dispatches from Cordoba Province reported the government capture of a large number of Moors and a quantity of war material with the fall of Alcaracejos.

Avila, Spain, March 30 (AP).—Insurgents hammered government militiamen today in a withering machine-gun and heavy artillery attack just northwest of the capital.

Attacks by government troops on Aravaca and Partridge Hill were reported to have been met by counter-attacks, with the Madrid army trapped in a cross-fire of machine guns and bursting shells. Insurgents said there were many government casualties.

3 Held in Alleged Stolen Bond Plot

Boston, March 30 (AP).—William J. Corcoran, a disbarred lawyer and former Middlesex County district attorney, and two alleged accomplices were held in total bail of $75,000 today on charges of transporting $11,000 worth of stolen Treasury bonds from Louisville, Ky., to Boston.

The men were remanded to jail in default of bail and the case was continued for two weeks.

The high bail was set at the request of Assistant United States Attorney Frank W. Tomasello, who charged that "this case is far reaching and may lead to a large ring involving many hundreds of thousands of dollars."

Corcoran was arrested on the street by Edward A. Soucey, New England chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

St. Louis, March 30 (AP).—Grant Fraser, 13-year-old son of Alexander Fraser, president of the Shell Petroleum Corporation, died of suffocation today in a fire which swept the rambling 21-room family residence in suburban Clayton.

Trapped in his second-floor bedroom, the boy ran to a window and called, "I'm suffocating. Help!" Two maids, who had escaped by way of a rear stairway, were unable to assist him.

False Fire Alarm Brings Probation For Officers' Sons

Charges of giving a false fire alarm resulted in three youths, all the sons of Army officers, being placed on probation for one year when they were arraigned in Police Court yesterday.

Judge Isaac R. Hitt suspended $50 fines against the youths and ordered them placed on probation at the request of Policeman H. H. Prince, who had arrested them.

The boys gave their names as Richard V. Barnum, 17, Chevy Chase, Md., son of Capt. Charles V. Barnum; Ward H. Maris, jr., son of Maj. W. H. Maris, 3400 Porter street northwest, and William R. Bennett, 18, son of Col. C. R. Bennett, Kenesaw Apartments.

Andrew L. Chapplear, 20, 937 C street southwest, was given a suspended $25 fine and placed on probation a year for giving a false alarm early yesterday.

The three youths are alleged to have committed the offense Sunday night.

Ickes Favors U. S. Hospital Control

Secretary Ickes yesterday informed Chairman Mary T. Norton, of the House District Committee, that he wanted to be heard before any action is taken on the proposal of the Jacobs committee to transfer Freedmen's Hospital to the District Government.

He made the suggestion because the hospital is connected with Howard University and added:

"I'm sure complications would arise if Federal control of the hospital were relinquished.

U. S. Jury Indicts 7 In Stock Fraud Case

Detroit, March 30 (AP).—A Federal grand jury today indicted seven persons, including three officials of R. Cummins & Co., Inc., which operates a distillery at Battle Creek, Mich., on fraud charges in connection with stock sales.

The 17-count indictment charged that the defendants violated the fraud and registration sections of the securities and exchange act and used the mails to defraud.

Collins Interested In New Jail Plea

At the hearings on the budget Representative Collins evidenced interest in the request of T. M. Rives, superintendent of the jail, for a new jail, and the sub-committee listened to estimates of costs from the engineer department. It made no provision for starting the jail, however, because of a lack of funds.

The sub-committee chairman wishes to give the jail a new execution chamber, taking the electric chair out of the dining room, where it is now located, but he explained yesterday that "they didn't want one."

The sub-committee reduced Budget Bureau estimates for the workhouse and reformatory by denying all new positions proposed and by disallowing $23,200 increases for maintenance. Additional employes, recommended by the Budget Bureau, were refused for the National Training School for Girls and the Industrial Home School for Colored Children.

Capper Offers Bill For Public Defender

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, yesterday introduced in the Senate a bill to create the office of public defender in the District. The measure authorizes a salary of $5,000 for the public defender and $4,000 for an assistant.

A similar measure was introduced early in the session in the House by Representative Scott (Democrat), of California. The duty of the office would be to defend persons financially unable to employ counsel.

Experts Assail Jacobs Formula As 'Unsound'

Comparison of Washington With Other Cities Is Called Inaccurate.

The Jacobs three-point fiscal relations formula, which the Collins sub-committee denounced so severely in its report on the District supply bill, yesterday was assailed by two experts who testified during executive hearings.

Thomas F. Murphy, assistant comptroller of the Farm Credit Administration, who participated in the U. S. Bureau of Efficiency inquiry, and George Lord, of Detroit, who aided the Mapes committee, turned on the findings of J. L. Jacobs, of Chicago, in a manner that convinced the sub-committee it should scrap the $50,000 report.

Murphy assailed the Jacobs plan for payment of contractural services between the Federal and District governments, and said the Bureau of Efficiency had studied the plan and then abandoned it because it felt the proposal could not be defended under attack.

Abandoned Comparison.

The Bureau of Efficiency, he said, likewise abandoned the plan of comparing the cost of operating the District government with the maintenance costs of cities of comparable size. The Jacobs report is based largely on a comparison of Washington with 17 cities.

"The principal difficulty we found was in getting statistics that were exactly comparable," he said, "from the standpoint of the assessed value of property for taxation purposes there."

Asked by Chairman Collins whether, in his opinion, adoption of the Jacobs formula would end the customary bickering between the District and the Federal Government, Murphy said he believed it would continue.

Lord was more outspoken in criticism of the Jacobs report.

Calls Plan "Unsound."

"I must take direct issue with Mr. Jacobs' committee in the statement that this plan of making comparison of the tax burdens borne by the citizens of various cities is unsound," he said.

"In my 29 years of practical experience in the field of taxation, I have yet to find or know of any plan similar to the plan followed by the so-called Jacobs committee.

"In order to reach a comparison with any degree approaching accuracy, it is necessary to take all of the property in any one assessing district. It is impossible to arrive at accuracy by selecting a few isolated properties, such as the Jacobs committee did."

Utility Hearing Called.

Baltimore, March 30 (AP).—Electrical and gas corporations of Maryland were invited by the public service commission to register their comments at a hearing April 12 on form system of accounts since it was adoped in 1929.

cial treatment of the downtown circles, construction of a by-pass across Rock Creek Park to connect Connecticut avenue and Sixteenth street, and for building the proposed K street extension.

The appropriation for people's counsel be eliminated, thus in effect abolishing the vacant office.

The four-year-old 25 per cent reduction in water rents be abolished and that a $10,000,000 reserve fund be accumulated to pay for anticipated expansions.

The committee delivered a scathing criticism of the Jacobs fiscal relations report, which cost the taxpayers of Washington $50,000 last year, in recommending that the $5,000,000 payment be restored.

Collins is prepared to defend this recommendation on the House floor by citing testimony of George McAneny, chairman, and J. L. Jacobs, of Chicago, before his subcommittee.

Committee's Conclusions.

Asserting that the committee has made a thorough study of the Jacobs report, together with the four-year-old Mapes committee report, the Collins subcommittee stated it had reached the following conclusions:

"First. That the three or four point formula contained and recommended in the so-called "Jacobs report" be used to solve the fiscal relations problem is unsound, both from the standpoint of equity and workability. Its application would tend to increase materially rather than decrease the controversy as to what constitutes an equitable fiscal arrangement between the two governments. It would further complicate budgetry procedure, increase personnel, and multiply executive figures in the governmental operation with its resultant loss of efficiency and, consequently, increased governmental costs. The measuring and valuing of each specific item of service the District performs for the Federal Government, and the Federal Government performs for the District, as recommended in point 1 of the three or four-point formula, would entail a vast amount of statistical work, increased personnel, and the result would be anything but satisfactory. There would be no limit as to what the District government could charge in their bill for each service and each bill for such service would cause much controversy as to the correct charge, thus making a multitude of disputes instead of the one problem as at present obtains under existing procedure.

"The other two or three points recommended by the Jacobs report are as visionary and fantastic as the one just mentioned and will be discussed at length later.

"Second. That the entire tax structure in the District is decidedly weak and fails to produce nearly the revenue that a modern tax system would produce. That is especially true of its specific and license tax system. Millions of dollars annually in revenue are lost to the District because of this condition. There is an utter lack of equality in the imposition of license taxes and the rate, in most instances, is ridiculously low. The owners of the baseball park pay an annual license tax of only $5, while the owners and operators of amusement parks, not used for baseball or athletic purposes, pay an annual tax of $65, and the owners of indoor or outdoor swimming pools pay an annual tax of $15. Persons engaged in manufacturing bed mattresses pay a tax of $75 per annum, while the owners of dry cleaning and dyeing establishments pay only $5 per annum. Many more instances might be cited. Owners of regular theaters where dramatic performances are given, and where operas are sung, pay a license tax of $50 per annum, while the owners or operators of large and profitable moving picture theater pay only $30 per annum."

"The committee believe that the entire tax system in the District should be thoroughly investigated with the view of materially broadening the tax base and equalizing both property and specifix tax levies. This is absolutely essential to balancing the District budget. Either that must be done or Congress will be asked to contribute much more than it should to the support of the District government.

"Having given full and careful consideration to the various elements involved in the question of the fiscal relations between the two governments, the committee believes that a Federal payment adjusting fiscal relations and to be used toward the expenses of the District government of $5,000,000 would be a fair and equitable arrangement and recommends accordingly."

With regard to the proposed survey of municipal activities for the purpose of effecting greater administrative efficiency, the committee report explans:

"The committee believes that the municipal activities of the District government should be thoroughly examined with a view to increasing the efficiency and economy of operation.

"It feels that there is over-lapping of duties and lack of modern procedure which should be corrected and that a general survey of these activities will result in large savings in appropriations and that a study of the tax system would ultimately result in a considerable increase in taxes collected.

"The committee recommends an appropriation of $15,000 for conducting this survey and has provided that a detailed report of the findings and recommendations resulting therefrom shall be available for consideration by the appropriate committees of Congress at the beginning of the next regular session."

The water system survey is proposed, the report explains, so as to bring about a condition under which the system will be self-supporting even when Capital improvements and expenditures are necessary. The rates should be adjusted, the committee suggests, as in the case of other utilities to bring about condition.

"In the past, water rates have been established so as to permit the setting up of a reserve fund to finance normal extensions of the system," the report stated. "It is now believed that rates should be adjusted so as to set up an additional reserve to cover certain future extensions of major importance.

"For the past three years and also during the present fiscal year, reductions have been made in water rates solely because there was no tangible basis upon which to establish rates. It is now believed that a study should be made with the idea of justifying a rate which would create a reserve fund sufficient to permit necessary major improvements in the distribution system during the next six years, estimated to cost $3,545,000, as well as major increases in the supply system, which in all probability must be financed by 1945, costing probably not less than $10,000,000."

The committee recommended an appropriation of $20,000 for this survey, to be made by the District engineer and to be completed within eight months. As a beginning for the reserve fund, it authorized the Treasurer of the United States to invest the surplus of the water fund for the 1938 fiscal year (but not exceeding $750,000) in United States securities.

Explaining its proposal regarding the playgrounds, the committee report states:

"During hearings on the bill the committee gave much time and consideration to the advisability of consolidating all public playground activities in the District of Columbia. The consensus of opinion was that the co-ordination of playground activities on, adjacent to, or near school buildings under a single head in the community center department of the public schools would be a highly desirable consolidation."

"In recommending this consolidation the committee has made appropriate deductions in the estimates allowed for the playground department as it exists at the present time. A total reduction of $97,565 has been made in the estimate of $209,580, leaving an appropriation of $112,015 available for the purpose of carrying on the work of the remaining playgrounds not involved in the transfer.

"The transfer will leave the administration of the 16 remaining playgrounds under the direct supervision of the existing playground department and provides for the operation of 20 playgrounds now under the playground department by the community center department of the public schools."

Twenty-seven of the 54 new school teachers authorized are intended to occupy new classrooms now or soon to be under construction. The remaining 27 are to supplement teachers in schools now operating.

A total of $1,683,000 is recommended for buildings and new sites. One of the new schools has been named by the committee in honor of Thomas Jefferson. It is to be a combined public library and high school to serve the Southwest.

Impressed by the plea of Health Officer George C. Ruhland, the committee allowed an additional $67,020 for improvement of Washington's public health record. This includes $11,330 for prevention of contagious diseases, $23,040 for nursing service, $27,060 for hygiene and sanitation in the schools and $3,390 for laboratory supplies.

For Improved Efficiency.

An additional $16,880 was provided "to put into effect an inspection of all public establishments and employes where food is sold or served."

Concerning the proposed transfer of the hospitals from the welfare to the health department, the committee said:

"Probably the most urgent and necessary problem which the committee had to consider in connection with the drafting of the entire bill was the transfer of the two large hospitals now under the direction and control of the board of public welfare."

"Every well-informed person who was at the same time disinterested advised that the hospitals could be operated more efficiently, economically and scientifically and give better service under the health department.

"The matter has been discussed with prominent physicians who are familiar with losal conditions, and the heads of municipalities in a number of cities throughout the United States have been contacted to ascertain under what agency local hospitals elsewhere are administered.

"All of the testimony presented to the committee other than from officials of the local government directly connected with these hospitals, was to the effect that the Gallinger Municipal Hospital and the Tuberculosis Sanatoria should be operated under the health department."

Collins admitted yesterday that the proposed transfer may be balked by an objection from one member of the House on the point of order that it constitutes legislation in an appropriation bill.

In proposing abolishment of the Children's Receiving Home, the committee explained that its members had made personal inspection trips on the institution.

"It is their considered judgment and recommendation that the quarters provided for this activity are unfit for the care of children, and it is proposed that the present home be abandoned on July 1, next.

"Due to the restricted quarters, and with no reflection on the persons operating the institution, children of all ages and classes are, of necessity, forced to intermingle to an alarming degree. The committee believes that under existing conditions attempts to segregate children cannot be effective.

"The estimate of $38,000 for continued operation during the next fiscal year is therefore disallowed and an appropriation of $12,000 is recommended for the operation of a system of boarding homes. It is believed that under this plan, better care can be given these children and a more effective segregation secured."

The committee slashed $53,500 from the Budget Bureau's estimate for public assistance of unemployed. It explained, however, that no cut in the funds actually provided for relief purposes is contemplated.

"The entire reduction has been applied to the limitation on expenditures for personal services, which is restricted to 10 per cent of the appropriation. The committee has applied a similar restriction on administrative expenses paid from Federal grants.

"A provision has been added to the appropriation by the committee placing all auditing, disbursing and accounting for relief funds, including employes engaged in such work, under the supervision and control of the auditor of the District.

"It is believed that a considerable saving can be accomplished through this procedure and that relief expenditures will be subject to a much closer scrutiny than at present exists."

The committee makes the recommendation for the first time, it says, that "all appropriations for street and road improvement and repair shall be payable from the gasoline tax fund."

It also recommends that the cost of maintenance of the department of vehicles and traffic, the purchase and installation of traffic lights, assessment and permit work, and operation of the division of trees and parkings be borne by the gasoline tax. This will amount to $466,040 in 1938.

Authority to carry on snow removal work has been transferred to the street repairs and maintenance fund, and provision is made for the District to use $250,000 in gas tax funds in grade-crossing elimination projects pending receipt of a Federal grant for the work.

In justifying its refusal to approve a recommended appropriation for a new Pennsylvania avenue bridge, the committee cited testimony that a steel structure would cost $2,000,000 and a masonry bridge $4,500,000

Thinks Cost Prohibitive.

"The committee believes that this cost is prohibitive and that construction should be deferred, and that with the expenditure of $40,000 provided for that purpose under repairs of bridges this structure can be put into shape so that it will meet all requirements put upon it for at least several years."

The bill is generous to the library, in which Chairman Collins has always shown a keen interest. It allows an increase of $43,990 above the Budget Bureau estimates.

The increase is intended to enable the main library to remain open each Friday afternoon and the major branches Saturday afternoons. It also will permit "reinforcement of the administrative staff, the bookpurchasing staff and the cataloging staff, which has had an increase of but six employes since 1930, although the work has nearly doubled since that time. A total of $27,990 is provided for the extra personnel.

The committee allowed an extra $14,500 for the purchase of books and $105,000 for completing Petworth branch library, with an increase in the authorization from $150,000 to $180,000 because of increase construction costs.

Another minor inter-departmental transfer is recommended in moving the office of superintendent of licenses from the assessor's office to the office of the superintendent of weights, measures and markets. It involves four employes besides the superintendent.

"The employes of the office of superintendent of weight, measures and markets," the report explains, "are constantly in touch with establishments where licenses are required and they can perform a large part of the work of checking on licenses to ascertain whether licensed establishments are renewing their licenses annually as required by law and whether the names of owners of the establishments are set forth accurately in the licenses."

The committee recommended that the office of bonding commissioner be set up in the corporation counsel's office at a cost of $13,040.

D. C. Employes Found in Many Odd Sidelines

Report Also Shows 3,000 Related to One or More in Service.

District government employes had cause yesterday to blush under unusual attention if not to shudder with apprehension as hearings and a supplementary report were released on Capitol Hill in connection with the District supply bill.

The supplementary report—too voluminous to be printed—disclosed that approximately 3,000 out of 10,617 District employes are related to one or more persons in the service.

Another report, contained in the hearings, showed 27 District employes spend part of their leisure adding to their incomes by a wide variety of part-time jobs.

The higher-paid city workers also had something to worry about, viz., a legislative rider which prohibits the reallocation of positions paying $2,000 a year or more if the change causes an increase in salary.

The District employe hardest hit, however, is Frank B. Marks, dog catcher. Last summer he was promoted from captain of the guard in the District Building at $1,500 a year to poundmaster with a salary of $3,080.

The House sub-committee on appropriations, after hearing him cite his fondness for dogs as his chief qualification for the job, cut his salary to $2,000.

The two major reports, while providing interesting reading even for members of Congress, led to no penalizing legislation. They brought many a chuckle, however, to rotund Ross Collins, chairman of the sub-committee.

Inquiry Predicted.

Collins predicted, moreover, that the nepotism report will form the basis of an investigation that will include the Federal Government as well.

It is doubtful, however, whether Congress would vote for such an inquiry if there is danger that it would include the legislative establishments.

The public schools are most rife with nepotism, the report submitted by Auditor Daniel J. Donovan disclosed. About 65 per cent of the 3,000 names are in the school system.

An outstanding example is the case of William McQueeney, superintendent of custodians, who has 15 relatives on the school pay roll, drawing, with his own salary of $3,300, a total of $27,280.

These include a sister, ten nephews, a brother-in-law, two sisters-in-law and one niece.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, has a nephew listed at $1,900, while G. C. Wilkinson, assistant superintendent of schools, has a brother-in-law, two nieces and a nephew, whose combined salaries total $17,600.

Among District officials outside the schools the name of Auditor Donovan was listed with a son in the highway department, while Clifford Lanham, superintendent of trees and parkings, reported a brother, two nephews, two cousins and one brother-in-law, all of whom draw a total of $23,500.

The name of Melvin C. Hazen, District Commissioner, was not listed, although he is reported to have a niece by marriage employed on the ABC board.

There were numerous cases of six and seven members of one family on the pay rolls and hundreds of husbands and wives.

Questionnaires submitted by Donovan at the direction of the House sub-committee asked that all "relatives by blood and marriage to the second degree removed from a common ancestor" be reported.

One Cab Driver Found.

The table showing outside vocations of District employes was ostensibly prepared because Collins believed that many city workers spent their time driving cabs to add to the traffic congestion.

Only one cab driver and one owner, who doesn't drive, were disclosed by the report.

Many other odd jobs were listed, however, as shown by these examples:

A policeman draws cartoons and earns $2,000 extra; a sewer department employe lectures; another policeman is an "entertainer;" a third officer of the law supplements his income with $8,000 a year from a rooming house conducted by his wife.

Salesmen of insurance, real estate radios, automobiles, and whatnot abound as do teachers in law schools and of music. Many employes have private law or medical practices which they attend to after 4:15 p. m., presumably, while others had small stores or shops which they supervise in off-hours.

Another class of employes who had cause to worry after the supply bill was reported was about 3,000 per diem workers who recently benefited by a Comptroller General's ruling that they are entitled to a 40-hour week with 48 hours pay.

Confronted with the threatened rise of $1,000,000 a year in this class of services, the sub-committee proposed a rider which states that per diem workers shall be paid only for the work done.

This means that they will not be paid on holidays, but Maj. Donovan stated that it will not reduce their present weekly rate of pay.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, was quick to defend his administrative and teaching staff last night.

"The report is news to us," he said, "because we have never looked into the matter of relationships among our employes. Teachers and administrators are hired through a board of examiners, which selects them on a basis of competence."

"I haven't had a chance to look into Maj. Donovan's report," said Dr. Ballou, "but I am assuming it is true. I have in mind one family that has had three or four of its members in the school system for two generations. But I know each member holds his job because of his competency, and takes great pride in that proficiency—I also know that none of them would try to 'pull' a relative into the system unless he merited the job."

District Supply Bill Provides For 54 New School Teachers

$12,750,695 Appropriation Asked for Education for Next Year; $379,000 Sought for Repairs to Buildings.

The District supply bill reported yesterday to the House recommends $12,750,695 in appropriations, or more than a fourth of the whole municipal budget. Yet the sum is $552,285 less than Budget Bureau estimates, but $275,735 more than current appropriations.

Besides allowing for 54 new teachers, the committee inserted $4,000 for the "in-service promotion" of teachers.

In a legislative rider the committee specifies that teachers "shall not perform any clerical work except that which is necessary or incidental to their regular classroom teaching assignments."

Chairman Collins, of the District sub-committee, explained that many teachers are being used where lower salaried stenographers might be utilized.

In allowing $94,180 for night schools, the committee provided that $8,000 shall be used for night schools in the western part of the city. This is in accord with a request from residents of Georgetown and the Northwest section.

The committee warned that power plants to serve the schools might be in order unless the Potomac Electric Power Co. makes a special combined rate for all city schools.

"Because of the volume of current consumed," the report stated, "the school authorities should be able to get a lower rate as one business concern instead of paying individual bills on 175 different school buildings at retail rates, and it does not believe there is a business concern in the country which would tolerate the existing arrangement."

The committee's report indulges in sarcasm in explaining why an estimate of $6,000 for school gardens is disallowed.

"The estimates provide that the item for school gardens be broadened into an appropriation for instruction in rudimentary science, which involved the purchase of and experiments with 'putt-putt' boats, Florence flasks, toy balloons and similar activities. The committee recommends that this type of instruction may well be deferred indefinitely."

For repairs and improvements to buildings aand grounds the bill carries $379,000, which is $35,475 less than the Budget Bureau estimates. The committee allowed $4,000 for improvements at the Central High School Stadium, while disallowing $35,475 for improvements it did not regard as essential for the next fiscal year.

Due to conflicting information, the committee said, the bill does not carry funds for construction of a junior high school on the Banneker Playground site, and eliminated an estimate for the purchase of additional land for the school. An appropriation for additional land adjoining the Dennison School also was denied.

The school building projects included in the bill with the limit of cost where construction is projected over two or more years is as follows:

	Appropriation in bill.	Limit of cost.
Completion of Dennison Vocational School	$236,000	$336,000

Hospital Shift In Supply Bill Widely Praised

Hailed as Step Toward Lowering District's High Mortality Rate.

Public health provisions of the District's 1938 supply bill reported to the House yesterday were hailed as a forward step toward lowering of the Capital's high infant mortality, tuberculosis and venereal disease rates.

By giving the Health Department control of the municipal hospitals, providing a $200,000 health center and increasing appropriations for existing services, the Collins committee elevates that agency from a minor $500,000-a-year unit to one with a $2,000,000 purse.

The Mississippian's committee, acting on advice of Health Officer George C. Ruhland, inserted items providing for additional public health nurses, improved laboratory service, a food inspection project, more adequate medical work in the schools and expansion of the contagious disease division.

The shift of Gallinger Hospital and the tuberculosis sanatoria from the Board of Public Welfare to the Health Department was decided upon after discussion with prominent physicians who are familiar with local conditions and the heads of municipalities in a number of cities."

Besides Gallinger, a general hospital primarily for indigents, the public institutions involved are the Upshur street Tuberculosis Hospital and the Children's Sanatorium, at Glenn Dale, Md. The adult sanatorium, at Glenn Dale, opening of which this year will result in the closing of the Upshur street hospital, also is included in the transfer.

Muster for Showdown.

Opponents and defenders of this shift, one of the most controversial features of the supply bill, have begun to muster for the coming showdown at the Capitol.

Dr. Earl R. Templeton, chairman of the public health committee of the District Medical Society, announced last night that his group will meet jointly with the society's executive committee Friday night to discuss the change, which was recommended to Congress almost a decade ago following a U. S. Public Health Service survey.

A detailed report on the proposed reform, giving it either indorsement or disapproval, will be made by the District Medical Society on April 8, Dr. Templeton declared.

Meantime the shift, strongly urged by Representative Collins as a means of unifying the Capital's public health activities, is being studied by the Board of Trade health committee and other agencies.

"The committee was impressed with testimony as to the general health conditions in the District," the report stated, "and the relatively high mortality rate compared with the entire United States."

Citing statistical statements submitted by Dr. Ruhland during the hearings, the committee added:

"Believing that definite steps should be taken to alter this situation, the committee has requested and the health officer has supplied an estimate of funds required to aid in bringing about an improvement in health conditions."

The increase, as summarized, amounts to $67,020 and is distributed among the following items: Prevention of contagious disease, $11,330; nursing service, $23,040; hygiene and sanitation, schools, $27,060; laboratory supplies and maintenance, $3,590; printing and binding, $1,000.

The committee recommended the transfer of the permit office, now under the Board of Public Welfare, to the Health Department. This involves 11 employes and $19,360.

An item of $16,880 will permit the employment of four food inspectors and six auxiliary employes to operate a food inspection service, covering all public establishments and employes where food is sold or served.

"This inspection is provided in many other municipalities," the report stated, "and the committee regards it as of prime importance in safeguarding the health of the community."

Salary increases for both Dr. Ruhland and his assistant, Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, are provided "in recognition of the additional and important duties * * * by virtue of the transfer of the municipal hospital." The health officer's salary is raised $2,000, including a $1,500 jump provided in a civil service reallocation, to $8,500. The assistant health officer's salary is raised to $7,500.

The report points out that the new adult Tuberculosis Hospital at Glen Dale, Md., will be open next July and that the hospital at Fourteenth and Upshur streets will be closed. The new institution, together with the Children's Sanatorium, will provide 950 beds, the committee said, "and should meet the additional needs for this service for an indefinite period."

Gallinger Hospital's estimate is cut $68,180 on the ground that its transfer to the Health Department will result in economies.

The health center recommended by the Budget Bureau is approved and allowed $200,000.

"This structure is the first of its kind contemplated for the District," the committee stated, "and is believed of primary importance in the program for improving health conditions."

Police and Fire Departments Rebuked in Funds Bill Report

Lack of Courtesy to Public Cited Against Former; Both Assailed for Assigning Uniformed Men to Clerical Duty.

A stern rebuke was administered to the Metropolitan Police Department for not being more courteous to the public in the District supply bill reported yesterday to the House.

"The committee wishes to call attention to the need for improvement in the matter of courtesy extended to the public by members of the Police Department and it recommends that prompt action be taken by the responsible officials of the District government with a view to improving conditions in this regard.

"Attention is also called to the great amount of time consumed by officers in enforcing petty offenses, such as parking violations and other minor infractions, and it believes that the demand for additional officers would be partially met if the time of the existing personnel were more profitably engaged."

"The committee is aware of the fact that the number of officers on the local force is less than that of many larger European cities, but it wishes to point out that the number compares very favorably with that in other American cities of comparable size.

"The committee also wishes to call attention to its disapproval of the assignment of police officers to clerical duties. It believes that this practice should be discontinued, and it expects to go into the matter thoroughly during its consideration of the next appropriation bill with a view to ascertaining what action has been taken to carry out this recommendation."

Despite the criticism, the committee allowed $3,749,005 for the department, or $42,100 more than the budget estimates. The increase will provide 25 additional police, 1 photographer, 1 stenographer and 6 chauffeurs. The request of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent, for funds to equip mounted police was rejected.

Text of Senator Robinson's Address Defending Proposal for Court Change

Democratic Leader Attacks Ignorance, Misrepresentation

Glass and Borah Draw Fire of Arkansan in Radio Broadcast; Justice McReynolds Also Scored on 'Sportsmanship.'

Text of speech by Senator Robinson (Democrat), of Arkansas, on behalf of President Roosevelt's judiciary recommendations:

No other legislation coming before the Congress during recent years has caused so much discussion as that proposed by the President for the re-organization of the Judiciary.

All features of the plan have been accepted or acquiesed in quite generally save that which relates to increasing the number of justices of the Supreme Court.

In the hearings before the Judiciary Committee and in the Senate, the debates have related in numerous instances to questions which are not actually involved and which, therefore, may be considered in large part as irrelevant.

Those who maintain that the increase in the membership of the Court from nine to not more than fifteen by the appointment of additional justices in every case where one refuses to avail himself of retirement, means the packing of the Court, the indirect amendment of the Federal Constitution, and the establishment of dictatorship, are compelled to rely on imagination rather than facts and reasonable arguments.

It is the primary purpose of these remarks to expose and eliminate if possible some of the irrelevancies that have been injected into the debates.

The answers to two questions, first, has the Congress the power to enact the legislation; and second, if the power exists should it be exercised, will tend to simplification of the issue and to correcness of conclusion.

Legality Admitted.

Much has been said and written about amending the Constitution, but no one has expressly asserted that it is necessary to do so in order to authorize increase in the number of justices composing the Supreme Court. It is almost universally admitted that such increase would violate neither the letter nor the spirit of the fundamental law. Lawyers, judges, newswriters, editors and others recognize that no change in the Constitution is required in order to carry the plan into execution.

Insofar as the plan affects the Supreme Court, it would accomplish two things, namely, authorize the voluntary retirement of judges at the age of 70 and permit the appointment of additional justices in instances where those who are eligible to retire fail to avail themselves of the privilege.

There has never been a time since the Constitution was established when it was seriously suggested that the Congress did not have authority to prescribe the number of judges that shall compose the court. Repeatedly during the present debate instances have been cited when the membership has been increased, and other occasions have been recalled when the number has been decreased. In no case of either increase or decrease by act of Congress has any serious question been raised as to the power of Congress to pass the legislation. The number of justices was not fixed by the framers of the Constitution. They could have done so, but they deliberately decided to leave the number open to be fixed from time to time by statute.

There is nothing sacred in the number nine any more than there is in the number 15.

The proposed change in the number of judges is within the power of Congress according to all authorities and precedents. Such changes constitute a part of the check and balance system provided in the fundamental law, along with the power of impeachment, the right to make provision for voluntary retirement, and to legislate regarding various features of organization and appeal.

If it be true that there exists no doubt as to the power of Congress to fix and change at will the number of justices, why do we hear so much about the necessity for amending the Constitution in order to accomplish that end? Why do self-constituted champions of the court declare that for Congress to use a power which it has frequently employed, and which it has possessed since the beginning of the Government, is to undermine the integrity and independence of the judiciary and to destroy that balance of authority which constitutes such an important feature of our national government?

Tactics the Same.

Always, heretofore, when changes in the number of judges have been proposed those opposed to the change have resorted to similar methods of opposition. They have declared that to increase or to decrease the number of justices is in some mysterious way violative of constitutional stability. In every case that changes have been made, good in the long run has resulted, and no substantial harm has come to any institution, privilege or right that rests on constitutional guarantee. It is illogical to charge that the Constitution undeniably gives to Congress the power to determine from time to time the number of the justices, but that the exercise of the power attacks the Constitution which recognizes such authority in the law making branch of the Government.

Is it not, therefore, manifest that only questions of policy are involved?

If the President's plan contemplated enlarging or detracting from the power of the Supreme Court as fixed in the Constitution, an amendment to that instrument would be in order. The proposed legislation does not touch the power of the Court. It, in no way, either expressly or impliedly, reduces or restricts the authority granted by the Constitution to our supreme judicial tribunal.

Therefore, statements, wherever made to the effect that a movement is in progress, led by the Chief Executive, to undermine and destroy the Supreme Court, are made in ignorance or misrepresentation. If the bill under consideration should be enacted, the Court can do the same things, if the justices are of the mind, as at present. No one can deny that the power of the Court remains unaltered by a change in its personnel.

The great majority of the arguments advanced by the opposition to the suggested legislation rests on the expressed or implied assertion that to enact the bill will be to diminish the authority of the Court or to impair its independance. Neither the authority nor the independence of the Court is involved unless you believe that the present justices constituting the Court have a vested right to have their opinions perpetuated.

Inasmuch as the provision relating to the retirement age is voluntary, no question arises from that as to the power of the Congress.

Retirement Permitted.

The right of a Federal judge to continue in his office during good behavior permits no argument. That he may retire when authorized by law has never been questioned. Whether it would be better to fix the age at 70 or 75 merely involves a question of policy and has not been treated as of primary importance by those who are opposing the President's plan.

No amendment to the Constitution is necessary to give effect to the pending legislation. It is in conformity to the fundamental law of our country. Therefore, arguments and appeals to support the Constitution have no logical application to the issue involved.

One does not refuse to support the Constitution when he favors legislation permitting the justices to retire and authorizing the President to make additional appointments where justices fail to retire.

Both Senator Borah and Senator Glass expressed in the Senate in February, 1930, their desire for a personnel on the Supreme Court that would reflect their economic views—a personnel that would not strengthen the viewpoint of the majority. In other words, they recognized that the appointment of justices properly may be with regard by the appointing power for changing the economic policies underlying the decisions of the court.

Decision Condemned.

When the nomination of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes was before the Senate it appears from the Congressional Record of February 11, 1930 (Volume 72, part 4, pages 3449, 3450) that the Senator from Idaho condemned the decision of the Supreme Court in the Baltimore Railway case as confiscatory and declared: "I do not want to strengthen the viewpoint of the majority." He further said: "Under the fourteenth amendment the Supreme Court of the United States as to most questions of a nature similar to the one which the Court passed upon in the railway case becomes really the economic dictator of the United States * * *"

No criticism made by any public authority since the adoption of the Constitution was more emphatic than the statement by the Senator from Idaho in the speech above referred to when he said: "I ask this question: When during the last 16 years has corporate wealth had a contest with the public when these vast interests claimed advantages which the public rejected, that Mr. Hughes has not appeared for organized wealth and against the public? * * * I am of the opinion that he (Mr. Hughes) feels that practically no restraint ought to be placed upon the vast corporate interests of the United States."

When asked by Senaor Dill, during the same debate, whether it would be possible, without resort to amendment of the Constitution, to prevent the Supreme Court from carrying out "the objectionable valuation system" (pertaining to railways), the Senator from Idaho said:

"I do not know of any means by which the situation could be controlled except by constitutional amendment; and the same power that can place those judges upon the bench would prevent the passage of a constitutional amendment."

While the nomination of John J. Parker to be associate justice of the Supreme Court was before the Senate the following colloquy was recorded (Con. Rec. Vol. 72, Part 8, page 8353, May 5, 1930):

"Mr. Waterman—But when the Supreme Court has trenched itself about as it has by its declarations in connection with contracts and by the fifth amendment and has said that it is beyond the power of legislation to change it, what can be done about it but to amend the Constitution?"

"Mr. Borah—Amend the court! * * * There have been a number of objections made to nominees for the Supreme Court, but objections have never been made in our history, so far as I know, on the ground that the nominee was a man lacking in character or lacking in integrity. The objections have always been raised because of views he entertained with reference to some public question."

Refers to Taney Case.

The Senator then referred to the attack made by Webster, Clay, Calhoun and Ewing on confirmation of Chief Justice Taney.

In the Congressional Record of April 29, 1930, Vol. 72, Part 8, page 7932, the following is found:

"Mr. Borah—They (the Supreme Court) pass upon what we do. Therefore it is exceedingly important that we pass upon them before they decide upon all of these matters. I say this in all sincerity. We declare a national policy. They reject it. I feel I am well justified in inquiring of men on their way to the Supreme Bench something of their views on these questions."

Another impressive statement by the Senator from Idaho when resisting the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Parker appears in the same volume under date of April 21, 1930. Having spoken of the "yellow dog contracts" and injunctions against labor unions, Senator Borah declared:

"But over, above and beyond these interests, transcending them in importance, is the interest of the National Government. Can there be anything of more concern to the state, to the Government, to the public generally, than that which is calculated to undermine, destroy or build up, to render fit or unfit for citizenship, men and women who toil? * * *

"The entire controversy, as far as the law is concerned, seems to hinge upon an isolated principle extracted from the common law. To apply the principle of common law, the barren, naked principle of common law which sprang up three and four hundred years ago under conditions in a business world which have passed away, and to refuse to consider the conditions in the business and labor world as they are today, is to deny working men and women the right or the benefit of advance and progress."

"Mr. Borah—Upon some judicial tribunals it is enough perhaps that there be men of integrity and of great learning in the law, but upon this tribunal something more is needed, something more is called for, here the widest and broadest and deepest questions of governmental policies are involved.

"And finally we must weigh his conceptions of human rights for we all know that the law takes on something of the heart and soul as well as the intellect of those who construe it. * * *

"The political atmosphere in these days is almost feverish with fright over the breakdown, as it is called, the failure of representative government. It would seem to some that we have approached the time when we doubt the efficiency and wisdom of free institutions. We hear here in our own country the suggestion of something different. The fault is not in the Government, the fault, if any may arise, will be in the failure to find men with the intelligence to appreciate the obligations imposed and the courage to execute the powers of government."

Questions Subversiveness.

If men of admitted intelligence and integrity nominated for service on the Supreme Court deserved rejection by the Senate because of their views on economic problems, why is it subversive in his opinion for the Congress to use its undisputed power under the Constitution to increase the membership of the court so as to permit the appointment of justices entertaining more liberal views regarding the public welfare than those who feel "that practically no restraint ought to be placed upon the vast corporate interests of the United States?"

If it is a proper remedy, as the Senator from Idaho said, "to amend the court so as not to strengthen the viewpoint of the majority" why is it not of equal importance to strengthen the viewpoint of the minority when to do so will build up and "render fit for citizenship men and women who toil?"

Congress has just as much right, for wholesome economic reasons, to increase the court as the Senate has to reject the nomination for membership on the Supreme Court bench with the same motive. Now, however, in this contest, the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Virginia have abandoned their proposal in 1930 to "amend the court," and propose to correct erroneous decisions which they regard as violative of sound principles by amending the Constitution.

It is a matter of profound regret that the able Senator from Virginia, Mr. Glass, has become so alarmed and emotional over this issue that he can find in his heart nothing but contempt and bitterness for those who dare question the sanctity and infallibility of the Supreme Court. Listening to his radio address last evening one could but feel that his argument was submerged and destroyed in the unreasonable bitterness of his expressions.

The Chief Executive has based the reorganization program on the premise that the social and economic needs of the present can be adequately dealt with by reasonable interpretation of the Constitution. His contention finds support in the action of the court itself when yesterday an act of Congress passed years ago and held unconstitutional in 1922, was revived by the process of express reversal of the Adkins case relating to minimum wages for women and children employed in the District of Columbia.

Proves Roosevelt Right.

What purpose was served by the Senator's use of such words as "frightful," "shocking," "brutal," "infamous," and "outrageous" in describing the mild program for reform of the Federal judiciary? On the very day that Senator Glass was denouncing the program in such vitriolic and extravagant language, the Supreme Court itself proved that the President is right by completely reversing its stand on the subject of minimum wage legislation. The Supreme Court merely changed its interpretation and in that way the long and tortuous task of amending the Constitution was avoided. In view of this action by the court how can the Senator from Virginia justify his unrestrained attack upon the President's proposal? Why should he feel so incensed when the court itself acknowledges that by its assumption of the right to determine policies, which are exclusively within the province of the legislative branch, it erroneously struck down an act intended to safeguard the health and morals of women and children workers?

The Senator from Virginia also was driven to error by his own wrath when he dared anyone to prove that Thomas Jefferson would ever have indorsed such a plan as that now pending.

Senator Glass apparently forgot that during the Presidency of Mr. Jefferson the number of Supreme Court justices was increased, an event which brought down upon his head all the scorn of a vindictive Federalist press. The outcry of the press was strikingly similar to that which greets President Roosevelt's proposal. In his testimony, Assistant Attorney General Jackson quoted a few of these press comments on Jefferson's court proposal. One paper called it the "death warrant of the Constitution." Another declared that "a moral blow has been struck at the independence of the judiciary."

At this point it seems appropriate to remark that while "earnestness is the path of immortality," vindictiveness and denunciation are indicative of weakness in argument.

There is further documentary evidence showing what Mr. Jefferson thought of the Supreme bench. Historians tell us that time and again he was outraged at the manner in which the judiciary usurped legislative power to thwart the will of the people. In 1810, when Associate Justice Cushing, of the Supreme Court, died, Mr. Jefferson said in a letter to Caesar Rodney:

"The death of Cushing is opportune, as it gives an opening for at length getting a Republican majority on the Supreme Bench."

In another letter to Albert Gallatin, Mr. Jefferson declared:

"At length we have a chance of getting a Republican majority in the Supreme Judiciary. For ten years has that branch braved the spirit and will of the Nation, after the Nation had manifest its will by a complete reform in every branch depending on them. The event is a fortunate one, and so timed as to be a godsend to me. I am sure its importance to the Nation will be felt and the occasion employed to complete the great operation they have been so long executing, by the appointment of a decided Republican. * * * "

Most of us are familiar with the repeal of the midnight judges act, which occurred under Jefferson's Administration and at his insistence. The repeal went into effect April 23, 1802, and expressly abolished the June term of the court, directing that the court should meet only once a year thereafter. The effect of that provision was to prevent the court from functioning entirely for 14 months, thereby depriving it of the chance to pass on the validity of acts of Congress.

What would Senator Glass say now if President Roosevelt should propose to do what Mr. Jefferson did—abolish the court for over a year?

Offered No Substitute.

The truth is that the remedy suggested by President Roosevelt whereby new blood would be infused into the court is the mildest plan for dealing with the present situation that has been suggested. Regrettably Senator Glass in his radio address added nothing to the argument as to what is the best plan of meeting the patent needs of the country. He simply denounced.

If he can become so enraged in denouncing the reorganization plan, what does he think of the amendment of the Senator from Montana authorizing Congress to pass finally on constitutional questions involved in legislation? What has he to say for the amendment requiring a seven to two majority in the court to invalidate a statute? These and many others of the more than 30 constitutional amendments introduced in the two houses of Congress during the present session do detract materially from the power of the court. Some of them practically take away the right of judicial review as to constitutionality of legislation.

The brilliant Senator from Virginia, Mr. Glass, in 1930 took a position on the subject similar to that occupied by the Senator from Idaho.

In the Congressional Record of February 13, 1930 (Volume 72, Part 4, page 3553) the Senator from Virginia inserted with approval an editorial from the Baltimore Sun of that date as follows:

"To legions of good American citizens, trained upon the standard copy-books dealing with the Government of the United States, the attack in the Senate upon the confirmation of Charles Evans Hughes as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court must be totally incomprehensible. Here is a man, hailed by his most relentless opponents as one of the greatest lawyers the country has ever produced, being faced with a fierce attack upon his suitability as the head of the highest legal tribunal in the land. And the opposition contains the most diverse elements ranging all the way from Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, a staunch Democratic conservative, to the progressive wing of the Republican Party.

"How does this weird thing come about? How does it happen that there can be any doubt by honest men that a very great lawyer is fitted to head the greatest American legal tribunal? It comes about primarily because the United States Supreme Court has ceased to be merely a legal tribunal and has taken unto itself the deciding of great economic issues that are related in no certain way with the law.

"To illustrate, when public utility regulation, which has played an extensive part in the debate over the Hughes confirmation, was first undertaken in this country the United States Supreme Court kept hands off. It said that the fixing of public utility rates was a legislative matter. Then it reversed its position and held that public utility rates must yield a fair return upon fair valuation of the property devoted to the public service, to avoid conflict with those provisions of the Federal Constitution that decree that there shall be no taking of private property without due process of law.

"Once this step was taken, over the opposition of a minority of the justices, who held that they were not equipped to decide the issues involved, the United States Supreme Court ceased to deal with any fixed principles of law in that field and became a body of economists. What is there in the Constitution, for example, that gives any guidance as to whether 5, 6 or 8 per cent is a fair return on public utility property? Absolutely nothing. And what is there that sheds any light on the question of whether utilities should be valued for rate-making purposes at what they originally cost, or what it would cost to reproduce them at current prices? There is not a shadow of a clew. The issues involved must be settled by the application of highly controversial economic theories.

"Since in this, among numerous instances, the United States Supreme Court has departed from anything related to a fixed body of law except by the most tenuous thread, and has become a body engaged in the practice of economics, it becomes highly relevant to know just what kind of economic theories the members of that court hold. If there be any doubt of that, it can be dispelled by studying the career of Justice Pierce Butler, of that body. For years, as a railroad attorney, he argued before the Interstate Commerce Commission for certain methods of railroad valuation. They were most highly controversial methods, on which the ablest lawyers were completely disagreed. Then he was elevated to the United States Supreme Court. Since then he has been making exactly the same arguments in public utility cases, but now he is able to give them the force of his opinion as a member of the highest court in the land.

"There are those who argue that the practice of the law is by its nature such that its devotees are merely expert pleaders, to make the best possible case for the side by which they are retained and that they are so subtly geared that when elevated to the bench their past partisanship fades entirely out of their memory. That may be true, so far as the law is concerned, but the United States Supreme Court, by its own will, has moved its activities into the larger orbit of determining social and economic policies, and then imparting to them the force of law. It has, in other words, brought itself to the place where legal competence is only one—and perhaps not the most important—test of fitness for service on that court. This accounts for the strange phenomenon taking place in the Senate, where the fitness of an admittedly great lawyer for what the copybooks say is the greatest legal post in the Nation, is being debated and rightly, as an economic and social issue."

Now quoting from the same record:

"Mr. Glass—If I may say just one word for the benefit of Senators who may not have heard the editorial read: it sets forth the view in which many of us concur, that the Supreme Court in recent years has gone far afield from its original function and has constituted itself a court in economics and in the determination of social questions rather than in the interpretation of statutes passed with reference to the Constitution itself."

Substance the Same.

What the Senator from Virginia, Mr. Glass, and the Senator from Idaho, Mr. Borah, said in 1930 is in substance exactly what President Roosevelt says now.

It is true that the issue does not arise in exactly the same form that it took when their arguments were delivered. It is also true that there is no difference insofar as the Constitution is concerned, in the power of the Senate to reject a nomination and the power of the Congress to increase the membership of the court. Why should Senators, why should anyone, become long faced and sorrowful when it is proposed to check the Supreme Court in its steady and persistent assumption of authority to decide questions of policy of hair-splitting distinctions conveived in the minds of justices whose training and experience prompt them to regard as law conclusions which are actually the outgrowth of "personal predilectons."

Why should the Baltimore Sun throw its great influence against the confirmation of Mr. Justice Hughes on the ground that his experience as a lawyer and the trend of his thought due to that experience, more than offset his oustanding legalistic qualifications and unquestioned integrity as a citizen; and oppose the exercise by the Congress of its power to increase the membership of the court in order to offset the influences of those justices in whose opinions there has been made apparent a determination to override the law-making authority in determining public policies?

The charge is frequently heard that the increase is the membership of the Supreme Court constitutes a "packing of the Court." What is meant by this charge, and what are the facts fairly applicable to it?

Naturally one who participates in the appointing power, whether as President or as United States Senator, performs his function with the background and economic views of the appointee in mind. Always, when contests as to the confirmation of nominees to serve on the Court arise in the Senate the issue as to whether the nominee shall be confirmed revolves around the views and opinions of the nominee, although, of course, his ability and standing in his profession are recognized as factors of very great importance. To illustrate, when the name of the present Chief Justice, Mr. Hughes, was sent to the Senate for confirmation and final appointment, some of the ablest Senators opposed his confirmation, not on the ground that Mr. Hughes was in any degree lacking in legal learning, general intelligence, or integrity. The sole ground upon which his appointment was resisted was that his professional career was so closely associated with large interests that he would be disposed subconsciously to take the position as Chief Justice assumed by him while serving his clients before the Courts.

Based on Personal Views.

All who are familiar with the debates which occurred when the nomination of Mr. Hughes was before the Senate will recall that such outstanding Senators as Borah, Glass and Wheeler, in fact, everyone who expressed opposition, grounded their arguments on the personal predilections of the great lawyer—predilections assumed to be the natural outgrowth of his professional experience and service.

Presidents have never named and Senators have always been slow to confirm judges whose viewpoints respecting constitutional questions are notably at variance with their own. Indeed, it would be difficult for anyone charged with responsibility for an appointment to justify the selection of one to preside over or serve in a court whose views as to the fundamental rights of citizens and the division of powers are known to be in conflict with the conscientious and the carefully formed conclusions and opinions of the appointing authority.

This principle has been observed from the beginning. It was in the mind of President Grant when the constitutionality of the legal tender cases was at issue. It controlled the action of President Lincoln when the Dred Scott decision which precipitated the Civil War was in mind. It was responded to by President Wilson when he sent to the Senate the names of liberal minded lawyers to serve on our highest tribunal. It motivated Presidents Taft and Harding when they carefully selected conservative lawyers, some of whom had earned distinction by representing in the Courts great corporate and financial interests.

If the nomination and confirmation of justices, generally regarded as liberals may be criticised on the one hand, what shall be said of the policy pursued by other Presidents and Senators who exercised their powers of appointment to secure services on the bench of individuals known and regarded as conservative and reactionary when judged by their private and public records relating to our Constitution and laws? The late Mr. William Howard Taft, former President and later Chief Justice, threw into the balances his commanding influence with the express and deliberate purpose of thwarting the appointments of progressives and of securing the selection of Justices notably conservative and reactionary.

Campaign for Harding.

In the interim between his term as President and his service as Chief Justice, during the campaign of 1920 when Mr. Cox and Mr. Harding were the respective nominees of their parties for the Presidency, Mr. Taft urged the election of Mr. Harding on the ground that Mr. Harding's election would "get rid of Wilsonism and all that follows in its train in respect to our domestic matters." He wrote in a letter to a friend as follows:

"However, it is a guess as to the future, and any man's guess may be as good as another, but I must see clearly and definitely the gain for the League of Nations plan before I sacrifice my intense desire to get rid of Wilsonism and all that follows in its train in respect to our domestic matters. Take, for instance, the four places likely to be filled by Wilson's successor on the Supreme Court. Think of the danger of another Brandeis and Clark. The power and usefulness of that court would be broken down under such appointments if the majority of the court were to be made up of them."

This letter was dated August 6, 1920. The desire "to get rid of Wilsonism" had no reference to the League of Nations. Mr. Taft, like Mr. Wilson, favored participation by the United States in the League. Indeed, he headed an organization to enforce peace among nations by military and naval power.

Manifestly, that which was objectionable to him in "Wilsonism" consisted in the liberal domestic policies which President Wilson suggested and supported. Justices on the Supreme Court, if liberal minded like Brandeis and Clark "would break down the usefulness of that court" in the opinion of Mr. Taft, if those who agreed with them should come into the majority.

In the sense of those who criticize the President's plan as "packing the court," Mr. Taft made the accomplishment of a purpose to pack the court the primary object in urging the election of President Harding.

Fulfilled Purpose.

As to whether his motive was consummated you may judge for yourselves. President Harding was elected and nominated Justices Sutherland and Butler as Associate Justices and Mr. Taft as Chief Justice.

Who will dispute that it would be just as much a packing of the court to use the appointing power to maintain the dominance of ultraconservatives in control of the court as to exercise the same authority to liberalize the decisions of that great tribunal?

Who insists that by clothing him in the judicial ermine a miracle is performed and that a nominee to serve on the Supreme Bench is by that process divested of his biases, prejudices and his mature opinions concerning economic questions?

Consider the case of Mr. Justice McReynolds.

He was quoted as saying in a recent public address that it is not good sportsmanship for one who has had a fair trial to criticize a decision of the Supreme Court. One wonders if the justice has forgotten that in February, 1935, when the Supreme Court delivered the famous gold clause decision he, from the bench, struck in rage at his fellow members on the bench, at the President and Congress, declaring that the decision had destroyed the Constitution, that "a debased currency is nothing new." He said: "Nero undertook to exercise that power. Six centuries ago in France it was regarded as a preogative of the sovereign. * * * It seems impossible to overestimate what has been done here today. The Constitution is gone. * * * The people's fundamental rights have been preempted by Congress. Some day the truth will be seen."

One wonders if the justice thinks that good "sportsmanship" consists in refraining from criticism of opinions when he is with the majority and indulging in abuse toward the majority when he takes the view of the minority. Just what is good "sportsmanship," Mr. Justice? Nowhere in the Supreme Court decisions, nowhere in legal literature does a judge stand more emphatically condemned by his own test as a poor "sportsman."

Available time is about exhausted. Stripped of fallacy and inconsistency, the arguments against increasing the membership of the Supreme Court with a view to causing recognition and observance by the majority of the restraints imposed by the Constitution on the authority of the judges, are inconsistent with precedent and with the fundamental law which never authorized any judicial body to exercise control over public policies.

SENATOR JOSEPH ROBINSON.

Bailey Favors Amendment to Enlarge Court

Is Roosevelt's Only 'Quick and Sure Way,' Says Senator.

By the Associated Press.

Chapel Hill, N. C., March 30.—Senator Josiah Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, said tonight "the quick way and the sure way" for President Roosevelt to bring about announced objectives of his proposed Supreme Court enlargement is "by way of amendment" to the Constitution.

Bailey said in a speech prepared for delivery before the University of North Carolina's Institute of Human Relations that the President would have to "take chances" on appointment of additional justices to the high tribunal.

"But no such chances would be taken if we should proceed by way of amendments to the Constitution," said Bailey, an opponent of the President's court expansion plan.

"We can draw them broad enough. The only chance to be taken is that they might not be ratified. But this is a chance we ought to take; we have no right to amend the Constitution without submission to the people and the States, retify them in 90 days.

"If action now is what is wanted, if certainty of action now is needed because of an approaching crisis, the quick way and the sure way, indeed the only way that will stand the test is by way of amendment."

Chicago, March 30 (AP).—Henry J. Allen, former Republican Governor of Kansas, and Senator Elbert D. Thomas, Democrat from Utah, carried debate on the court issue to a public mass meeting tonight.

"You give the President of the United States the power to add a servile court to a servile Congress," Allen declared, "and I do not care what you call the government of the United States, its President has become its dictator."

bers on the bench, at the President and Congress, declaring that the decision had destroyed the Constitution, that 'a debased currency is nothing new.'"

"One wonders," Robinson said, "if the justice thinks that good 'sportsmanship' consists in refraining from criticism of opinions when he is with the majority and indulging in abuse toward the majority when he takes the view of the minority."

The Senate's Administration spokesman plainly indicated the court plan will be pressed vigorously despite the Supreme Court's minimum wage decision of Monday eliminating the "no man's land" between State and Federal powers.

Cites Court Decision.

"The Chief Executive has based the reorganization program on the premise that the social and economic needs of the present can be adequately dealt with by reasonable interpretation of the Constitution," he said.

"His contention finds support in the action of the court itself when yesterday an act of Congress passed years ago and held unconstitutional in 1922, was revived by the process of express reversal of the Adkins case relating to minimum wages for women and children employed in the District of Columbia.

Refering to Senator Glass' radio speech, Robinson said it was "a matter of profound regret that the able Senator from Virginia * * * has become so alarmed and emotional over this issue that he can find in his heart nothing but contempt and bitterness for those who dare question the sanctity and infallibility of the Supreme Court."

"On the very day that Senator Glass was denouncing the program in such vitriolic and extravagant language, the Supreme Court itself proved that the President is right by completely reversing its stand on the subject of minimum wage legislation," he said.

Quotes Glass Speech.

He said the court by its action had acknowledged "it erroneously struck down an act intended to safeguard the health and morals of women and children workers."

Quoting from an editorial introduced into the Congressional Record by the Virginian in 1930, and remarks upon it by Senator Glass, Robinson said that what Glass and Borah said about the court in 1930 "is in substance exactly what President Roosevelt says now."

He said Glass in his remarks at that time concurred in the view that "the Supreme Court in recent years has gone far afield from its original function and has constituted itself a court in economics and in the determination of social questions rather than in the interpretation of statutes passed with reference to the Constitution itself."

In like manner, Robinson quoted at length from statements made at different times in the Senate by Borah when the nominations of Chief Justice Hughes and later, John J. Parker, were before the Senate.

He said Borah declared Hughes prior to his nomination had appeared frequently "for organized wealth and against the public."

It was during debate on the nomination of Parker, Robinson said, that Borah replied to a question: "Amend the court!"

Upholds Congress Power.

"Congress," Robinson said, "has just as much right, for wholesome economic purposes, to increase the court as the Senate has to reject the nomination for membership on the Supreme Court bench with the same motive.

"Now, however, in this contest, the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Virginia have abandoned their proposal in 1930 to 'amend the court,' and propose to correct erroneous decisions which they regard as violative of sound principles by amending the Constitution."

Robinson said those who claim the proposed court enlargement program means "packing," indirect amendment of the Constitution, or the establishment of "dictatorship" must "rely on the imagination rather than the facts and the reasonable arguments."

He said that "statements, wherever made to the effect that a movement is in progress, led by the Chief Executive to undermine and destroy the Supreme Court, are made in ignorance or misrepresentation."

Stevens Quits To Back Court Reorganization

Leaves Tariff Commission to Take Active Part as Private Citizen.

Raymond B. Stevens, member of the Tariff Commission, resigned yesterday "to take an active part" as a private citizen, in supporting President Roosevelt's court reorganization proposal.

He thus followed the example set by John G. Winant, who resigned last September from the Social Security Board in order to reply to campaign attacks of the social security law. Winant returned to the board in November but quit again several weeks ago to devote his attention to private affairs.

President Roosevelt yesterday made public Stevens' letter of resignation and his own letter accepting the resignation and praising the "high-minded" considerations" prompting it.

Stevens wrote:

"Your proposal concerning the Supreme Court is clearly constitutional. It offers a reasonable hope that for some years to come the court will exercise that self-restraint, moderation and careful regard for the limits of its own power under the Constitution that the minority of the present court have shown. It should put an end to 'tortured constructions' of the Constitution that embody the 'economic predilections' of individual judges.

"I am confident that your proposal will be adopted if there is wide public understanding of its purpose, and I desire to take an active part in its support."

Stevens has long been in public service. A former member of Congress, he later served as special counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, was vice chairman of the United States Shipping Board from 1917 to 1920, American representative on the Allied Maritime Transport Council in 1917 and 1918, and adviser on foreign affairs to the Siamese government until he was appointed to the Tariff Commission in 1935.

Bid to Conclude Court Hearing Meets Rebuff

Foes of Change Confident; 50 More Witnesses to Be Heard.

to meet our needs if the independence of the Supreme Court has been left unimpaired."

Warning by John D. Miller, president of the National Co-operative Council, that the court plan breeds "distrust of courts" and "if the American people completely and finally lose their confidence in the courts, the only alternative is a Government by force."

Prof. Griswold, a husky, black-haired young man—so youthful one Senator called him a "youngster"—formerly served as a special assistant to the Attorney General, assigned to the office of Solicitor General Stanley Reed. He served with the Justice Department for five years, leaving in the summer of 1933.

Precedent Is Denied.

Griswold disputed assertions that former changes in the Supreme Court membership served as a precedent for the present proposed enlargement. Discussing each prior change in its own historical setting, he concluded that none supplied a precedent for the President's plan.

"At their most they do not hold a candle to the present proposal," he said. "No one of them added more than two judges. * * * And it cannot be shown that the dominant purpose in increasing the size of the court was ever the desire to influence or control its decisions."

Conceding a majority of the court had sometimes taken what he called a "too narrow" view of the Constitution, he insisted "we should not be blind to the great mass of cases in which the court has performed its function ably and well merely because there are some cases in which we disagree with the results it reached."

Griswold said there is still an adequate constitutional field for legislative action not yet pursued; that a six-judge increase would interfere with prompt court procedure; that once increased to 15 "it will be impossible ever to restore it to nine again," and there would be in it "germs of a crisis far more serious than any now envisaged by the present difficulty."

Paves "Way For Dictator."

"Bread down the barriers which have protected the independence of the Supreme Court, and the way will lie broad and open for the first man-who-would-be-dictator, whatever his name may prove to be," he said.

The witness suggested constitutional amendments either requiring a court majority of nine to declare acts unconstitutional, or limiting the terms of justices to 18 years.

Griswold told the committee some friends of his in Washington informed him the Administration's first purpose was to provide a separate "Constitutional court," and relieve the Supreme Court of all but appellate functions. At the suggestion of Chairman Ashurst, his testimony was stricken from the record as hearsay.

As questioning turned on the Supreme Court's minimum wage decision, Senator Dieterich (Democrat), Illinois, asked Griswold if he thought the President's bill and the committee investigation "had any influence on the court."

"I have no knowledge of that," the witness replied.

Dieterich said he thought "there was a suspicious circumstance there." Griswold said the court showed "justice and courage" in changing its former stand.

Answers Ashurst.

When Ashurst argued that the President's plan would take no power from the court, the witness responded:

"No, it wouldn't. But it would change the situation so that you would almost have to put quotes around the word 'court.'"

Miller, who told the committee his National Co-operative Council was "an information and service body" for leading farm co-operatives, testified the court plan is tantamount to giving the President "power to reverse decisions of the Supreme Court."

"I am opposed to it because of my convictions that at the best it will impair, while at the worst it may destroy the independence of the Supreme Court," said the diminutive silver-haired witness.

Says Court Is Powerless.

Like Griswold, Miller said he saw no need for "haste" and no "crisis" facing the country at this time.

He contended the Supreme Court is powerless to fight back at the attack made upon it but "the people in defending it are defending themselves."

He said the President has "patronage" weapons, and Congress "controls the purse" but "the Supreme Court has none of these powers."

Waltman Comment on Wage Law Decision

Excerpts from text of radio interview of Franklyn Waltman, political commentator of The Post, by Thomas McCarthy over Station WJSV last night.

McCARTHY—You and the Supreme Court apparently had a very busy day yesterday, Mr. Waltman. Would you agree that history was made in the Supreme Court yesterday?

Waltman—I believe yesterday was a historic day in the Supreme Court. I found it to be the most interesting and colorful day since that session of the court late in May, 1935, when the nine justices were a unit in shooting down the Blue Eagle of the NRA, declared the first Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage moratorium act unconstitutional and then held that the President had exceeded his authority in removing from office Federal Trade Commissioner William E. Humphreys. That day marked the beginning of the heated and often bitter, controversy over the Supreme Court which has raged for almost two years and now appears to be reaching a dramatic climax.

McCARTHY—What decisions of the Supreme Court yesterday were comparable in importance to those which were handed down in May, 1935, and which set off the present Supreme Court controversy.

"Surprising" Action.

WALTMAN—I think the Supreme Court handed down two very important decisions yesterday. One unanimously upheld the constitutionality of the amended railway labor act and the other surprisingly declared that the minimum wage law for women in the State of Washington was a constitutional exercise of pawer by the Legislature of that State.

McCARTHY—Mr. Waltman, why do you call the court's action regarding the Washington minimum wage law "surprising?"

WALTMAN—This decision contained an element of distinct surprise because it was a complete reversal of the court's previous rulings on the question of the constitutionality of minimum wage laws. Only last June the court by a 5 to 4 vote declared unconstitutional a New York minimum wage law passed in 1933.

McCARTHY—Was there a difference between the New York and the Washington laws?

Laws Differed.

WALTMAN—Yes, there was a difference, but this difference was not cited by the court as the reason for the contrary decisions it handed down. Frequently the court and the legal profession can make distinctions between various legislative measures which to the layman appear to be practically the same. I think the court is quite right in doing this where the facts justify it. But the court did not contend in this case that there was a material distinction. In the Washington minimum wage case the court, in so many words, overruled or reversed its previous attitude on the question.

Back in 1923 the court in what is known as the Adkins decision, declared a minimum wage act which Congress had passed for the District of Columbia unconstitutional on the ground that it represented an unwarranted interference with the individual's right of freedom of contract. In other words, the court held that an employe and an employer each had the right to accept and to pay whatever wages were mutually satisfactory to each other and that the due process clause of the fifth amendment prevented the Federal Government from interfering with that right.

Subsequently the same ruling was applied to State minimum wage legislation under the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment.

McCARTHY—Has not the Supreme Court on several occasions upheld the Constitutionality of State and Federal laws prescribing the maximum hours which certain types of employes could work?

Safety Health Reasons.

WALTMAN—It has. In the case of railroad workers the Court held Congress had this right as a safety measure. It has upheld several State laws limiting the hours which women may work on the ground that it was within the police powers of State Legislatures to promote health by such measures. But the Supreme Court majority in the Adkins case drew a distinction between laws which regulated minimum hours of work and laws which regulated minimum wages. Personally, I never saw the difference and Chief Justice Hughes in the Washington State opinion yesterday assailed as unsatisfactory this effort to make a distinction.

McCARTHY—What did the Court decide yesterday?

WALTMAN—The court decided in effect that it had been wrong in 1923 and it overruled the Adkins decision—threw it bodily out of the window.

Chief Justice Hughes, taking cognizance of recent economic changes, pointed out that "the exploitation of a class of workers, who are in an unequal position with respect to bargaining power and are thus relatively defenseless against the denial of a living wage, is not only detrimental to their health and well-being but casts a direct burden for their support upon the community. What these workers lose in wages the taxpayers are called upon to pay," and he emphatically added that: "The community is not bound to provide what is in effect a subsidy for unconscionable employers;" that "the community may direct its law-making power to correct the abuse which springs from their selfish disregard of the public interest."

In a word, the court held that State legislatures have the power to prescribe reasonable minimum wages as a remedy for recognized evils in our industrial life and that such laws are a justifiable interference with freedom of contract.

McCARTHY—What will be the effect of this historic decision?

D. C. Wage Law.

WALTMAN—Well, it clears the way for State minimum wage legislation for women and, I think, also for men workers if that is regarded as wise. There is some doubt as to whether the District of Columbia law, invalidated in 1923, has now been revived by the action of the court in overruling the Adkins decision. The President late today announced he had asked the Attorney General for an opinion on that question and that, if the old law is not now in force, he would recommend to Congress enactment of a new law. So it appears that as far as Washington is concerned there will be a minimum wage law for women and perhaps also for male workers.

McCARTHY—Is it unprecedented for the Supreme Court to overrule one of its former decisions?

WALTMAN—It is unusual but not unprecedented. All of us remember that the court's ruling in the first legal tender cases subsequently was overruled. Charles Warren, the brilliant historian of the Supreme Court, told me last night that when he was Assistant Attorney General in 1916 he asked the Supreme Court to overrule a decision it had made unanimously 11 years previously in relation to a Federal law making it unlawful to sell liquor to Indians on Government lands—and the court did so by a unanimous decision. Five years ago in a dissenting opinion, Justice Brandeis listed 50 or more decisions of the Supreme Court which it had subsequently overruled.

McCARTHY—Most of us have the impression that minimum wage laws are something which originated with the New Deal, but I gather such legislation has been attempted for many years.

Australia Pioneered.

WALTMAN—The first law dealing with minimum wages was passed in Victoria, Australia, in 1896. In 1909 Great Britain passed the trade boards act, which provided for boards to fix minimum wages in industries where the rates were unusually low. The scope of the British legislation has since been greatly broadened. In this country Massachusetts passed the first minimum wage law in 1912.

McCARTHY—I would like to ask you further questions about minimum wage legislation, but our time does not permit. Please tell us something about the Supreme Court ruling on the railway labor act.

WALTMAN—May I first briefly say a word about the law and the question at issue. In 1934 Congress amended the railway labor act to provide for a system of mediation of labor disputes. This act provided that railroads must treat with or enter into negotiations with the representatives selected by a majority of their workers when labor disputes arose. In other words, this act imposed collective bargaining on the railroads, which are under the legislative jurisdiction of Congress.

Recognition Refused.

The issue in the case which went before the Supreme Court arose when the Virginian Railway refused to recognize and deal with an American Federation of Labor union on behalf of what are called "back shop" repair employes. The lower courts issued an injunction requiring the railway to do so and the railway appealed to the Supreme Court.

In its unanimous decision the court held that the terms of the act were enforceable by an equity court. It then held that the power of Congress over interstate commerce extended to such regulation of railroads to their employes as are reasonably calculated to prevent interruption of interstate commerce by strikes. The means chosen in the act were appropriate to the end sought and hence were within the Congressional power, held the court, adding that the back shop repair employes were sufficiently a part of the railroad system as to cripple interstate commerce should they strike. And again speaking through Justice Stone the court asserted that "the fifth amendment like the fourteenth amendment is not a guarantee of "untrammeled freedom of action and of contract" and added that "in exercise of its power to regulate commerce Congress can subject both to restraints not shown to be unreasonable."

Majority Rule.

As for the majority rule contention, the court held that the determination of a majority of those voting should control, since those not voting should not be permitted to prevent action, either through their own indifference or as a result of coercion by their employers.

McCARTHY—Is this the first time the Supreme Court has passed squarely upon collective bargaining in labor relations?

WALTMAN—Yes, although it impliedly approved collective bargaining in its decision in the Railway Clerks case. I think it is of far-reaching importance that the court in this case has placed the stamp of approval of the validity of laws requiring collective bargaining. That ruling will have a bearing on the Wagner labor relations act, although involved in the cases on that subject before the court is the question of the right of Congress to enforce collective bargaining on manufacturing enterprises.

U.S. Ready to Retire Judges, Sibley Says

Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, last night predicted the American people would approve a proposal for retirement of Supreme Court judges at the age of "70 or 75."

Speaking to diplomats and members of the foreign colony at American University, Sibley said he had come t othis conclusion as a result of extensive traveling throughout the country in his capacity as president of the national chamber, during which he sounded out public opinion.

But the American people, he emphasized, should be given the right to express their opinion on any such important change. The speaker did not refer specifically to President Roosevelt's proposal to enlarge the court, nor mention the President's name.

With the subject of "Government and Business," Sibley insisted that "American initiative and enterprise must be preserved—an American must be free to enter any line of business he wants to and move forward in its development." He indicated, however, the complexity of modern life was leading to necessity for more Government regulation. Business, he believed, should have a hand in writing these regulations.

Referring to the spread of the labor movement, Sibley said heretofore the mass of the workers did not belong to any kind of a labor union. Business, he thinks, will insist on more "responsibility" on the part of labor. Business management now, he said, is subject to suit for breach of contract, but organized labor, so far, he charged, has not been so "responsible."

New Wage Law Appears Likely In Washington

he explained, is that the Children's Hospital, which had it made invalid, might not be forced to pay minimum wages unless other legislation were passed.

He intimated that if such a contention proved successful other corporations might put the Children's Hospital plea to their own use.

The Commissioners, awaiting Seal's formal opinion, refused to comment on the matter.

The Washington Hotel Association, whose members would be affected directly by minimum wage laws for women, met but took no action on the matter beyond instructing their legislative committee to "watch it."

Backing of any minimum wage law was promised by Morris L. Verbov, of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers Alliance. He estimated that between 1,000 and 1,200 women restaurant workers would be affected and said his organization would back any minimum wage legislation regardless of union problems.

Several Washington business men telephoned Seal to learn whether the minimum-wage law would be either retroactive or immediate in effect. He told them that, so far as he knew, neither would be the case. He pointed out there is no organization set up to take care of minimum wage enforcement.

At the meeting of the hotel association the court decision was referred to a legislative committee. Willard M. Kochenderfer, secretary of the association, declared that the association was not "alarmed" and gave, as his private opinion, that the ruling was a "bad break" for women.

"Right now," he said, "there's a school in New York which teaches boys to be chambermaids."

On the Hill, Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, declared his belief that "we need a bill with more stable and certain provisions."

Mrs. Mary Norton, chairman of the House District Committee, said that, while she believed a new minimum law necessary, she would not advocate such legislation until she had an opinion from the Commissioners.

Many guesses were being made about the amount of minimum wages. The former law fixed salary for women in the printing and publishing business at a minimum of $15.50 a week, gave those in mercantile establishments, hotels and restaurants $16.50 and those in laundries and cleaning shops $15.

It was believed, however, that if a new law is to be made, changes in cost of living would have to be considered before a minimum wage is fixed.

A Welcome Visitor.

Lord Tweedsmuir, who with Lady Tweedsmuir is now staying at the White House as the guest of President Roosevelt, is doubly welcome to Washington. As governor general of Canada, he is the personal representative of King George VI, the sovereign of a nation and an empire with which the United States enjoys the friendliest relations. As a distinguished British man of letters, Lord Tweedsmuir is well and favorably known to the American people, although better as John Buchan than by his present title.

His visit to Washington is officially stated to be the return of the visit paid by the American Chief Executive to Canada last summer. Nor is there any reason to doubt that this is all there is to it. For Lord Tweedsmuir has no constitutional authority to conduct any formal discussions with American leaders on subjects of Canadian-American interest. Such discussions were in order and took place on the occasion of the recent stay in Washington of Premier W. L. Mackenzie King.

Yet Lord Tweedsmuir's visit to the Capital together with the President's prior trip into Canada, does serve a very useful purpose in further cementing the ties between this country and its good neighbor to the north. It shows that the far-famed undefended frontier dividing Canada from the United States is easy to cross. That is a fact known by personal experience to many thousands of Americans and Canadians. It is a happy extension of their regular habits to have officials of both governments, including those of the very highest rank, follow this delightful and rewarding practice.

Absorbing The Unemployed.

In February the employment index of the Department of Labor advanced to 98.9 per cent of the base period 1923-25, thus reaching the highest level attained since 1929. Between the middle of January and the middle of February, 215,000 additional employes were taken on and during the year numbers employed in the industries surveyed rose by 1,550,000. These gains have been accompanied by a marked expansion in pay rolls and increases in average weekly earnings.

In spite of this gratifying improvement in the business outlook, the numbers directly employed on WPA projects still amounted to approximately 2,163,000 at the end of February. Although this figure is a decided reduction from the 3,036,000 on the WPA pay rolls a year ago, it remains a formidable total. Its magnitude is indicated by comparing it with the 1,345,000 persons constituting the total number of Great Britain's insured unemployed at the end of 1936.

It is important to realize that the WPA total has recently been reduced by the transfer of about a quarter of a million workers in drought areas to the Resettlement Administration, which is a distinction without much difference. Moreover the total given excludes a large number of relief workers engaged on the emergency projects of other Federal agencies. Allowing for these deductions, it is seen that the decrease in the work-relief lists lags far behind the pick-up in private employment.

With the index of industrial activity of the Federal Reserve Board close to the level of the boom year 1929, and well above that of the base period 1923-25, it is undeniably perturbing to find that the numbers employed by the industries surveyed are still slightly below the figures of the mid-twenties. In view of the interim increase in population, it is evident that the unemployment problem is most decidedly still with us. That fact is further emphasized by the recent WPA report. The investigators concluded that the volume of goods produced and services rendered will have to increase 20 per cent above the 1929 level before unemployment can be reduced to the 1929 figure.

The National Industrial Conference Board estimates that if the present rate of increase in business activity is maintained the available labor surplus will be absorbed and an actual shortage will be probable by 1940. That, of course, is an assumption based upon many contingencies, but it does at least relieve the gloom which contemplation of the actual employment picture is likely to encourage.

If reduction of the relief burden is to be speeded up as employment rises, special efforts will have to be made to overcome employer reluctance to hiring men from work-relief rolls. The United States Employment Service is doing its best to aid the transfer, and more can be done if the Administration shows a firm determination to reduce the scale of relief spending.

Of course, there is a natural and unavoidable lag in the re-employment of men on relief rolls, largely because they carry a relatively large proportion of unskilled and inefficient workers. That is one of the inevitable handicaps of any Government work-relief system, and one of the reasons why such a system, once established, is very difficult to demobilize.

The District Supply Bill.

Reactions to the 1938 District appropriation bill will doubtless be generally favorable, with a tinge of skepticism as to some of its specific innovations. It is evident that the House sub-committee on District appropriations has done a tremendous amount of work since its hearings began. For the most part its diligence will be applauded. Yet it has gone clearly beyond its province in adding a large number of legislative proposals to an appropriations bill.

Of course, the major contribution of Representative Collins' committee is its disposition of the so-called Jacobs fiscal formula. A careful investigation showed the elaborate plan of the Jacobs committee for distributing costs of the local government to be "unsound both from the standpoint of equity and workability." In taking this attitude the committee is following the lead of The Post and virtually all other civic agencies that have analyzed Mr. Jacobs' $50,000 tome.

Undoubtedly the District will once more be granted a $5,000,000 lump sum from the Federal Treasury to offset national interests in the local budget. Chairman Thomas of the Senate sub-committee handling District appropriations had announced his intention to recommend continuation of this arrangement before it was advocated by the House committee. By comparison with the amount that would have been obtained under the Jacobs formula the allowance is generous. But measured against real national interests in maintenance and development of the Capital City this is a small contribution.

The task of working out a fiscal formula that will automatically adjust the Government's share of this expense still remains to be accomplished. No doubt the House committee, as well as the Senate committee, would welcome suggestions along this line from the District itself. It is certainly apparent that if anything of this sort is to be achieved it will have to be initiated within the community.

Since the committee has approved a considerable increase in the 1938 budget, higher taxes become inevitable. The District would do well to face this necessity realistically. Its case for an equitable adjustment of expenses and for adequate appropriations to relieve critical situations in the Health Department, and other agencies, will be much stronger if local taxpayers are willing to pay their portion of the cost.

In preparing nine revenues measures, however, the appropriations sub-committee has encroached upon the function of the regular District Committee. Indeed, the new bill is loaded down with legislative riders that should have been considered by that group of Congressmen specially assigned to the task of scrutinizing local bills. Some of the changes proposed may be overdue. Yet it is well to remember that a committee appointed by the District Commissioners is now working out a comprehensive plan for reorganization of the local government. Instead of making piecemeal shifts through an appropriation bill, the committee would be better advised to pass its suggestions along for integration into the general plan.

A Moral For Congress.

No decision recently handed down by the Supreme Court carries a more direct moral for Congress than that unanimously upholding the revised Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage moratorium act. The first Frazier-Lemke act was invalidated solely on the ground that it impaired the security of mortgagees, depriving them of property without due process of law. When the measure was carefully redrawn, so as to preserve the fundamental rights previously encroached upon, it was unanimously upheld.

Originally the farm mortgage moratorium act was forced through Congress by a filibuster engineered by Senator Huey Long. There had been no careful deliberation by Congress as a body upon either its constitutionality or the wisdom of the policy involved. An objective analysis by Robert E. Cushman, professor of government at Cornell University, states that the law "legislated property rights out of existence in a harsh and arbitrary manner."

In the earlier unanimous decision, also written by Justice Brandeis, the Court pointed out that this act would have denied, in five different particulars, the right of mortgagees to protect their property interests. Taking note of the opinion, Congress redrafted the act so as to safeguard the essential rights guaranteed by the Constitution. The success of its effort is attested by the fact that no one of the nine justices regards the new measure as an encroachment upon individual rights.

The difference between constitutionality and unconstitutionality often lies no deeper than the careless drafting of legislation. The history of this measure strongly suggests that some important objectives of the New Deal, which appear to have been frustrated by the courts, might readily have been attained by more careful law-making. Of course, that reasoning would not hold where acts have violated fundamental principles imbedded in the organic law. But it does very pointedly apply to the uncritical enactment of measures definitely within the broad limits of Federal power.

Incidentally this effective judicial check, upon legislation so sloppily drafted as to endanger constitutional rights, illustrates one of the very useful functions which an independent court performs.

At The Psychological Moment.

As every military expert knows, there is a psychological moment when a frontal attack is the most effective strategy. That moment was seized and turned to good account by Senator Carter Glass in his Monday night radio indictment of the proposal to pack the Supreme Court.

Whether or not by pure coincidence the Virginian's broadcast followed close on the heels of the court's epoch-making decision in the Washington minimum-wage case. Denial that such protective legislation can be challenged "as repugnant to the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment" has undermined the President's argument that "we live in a Nation where there is no legal power anywhere to deal with its most difficult practical problems." And that argument was almost the only one with any shadow of reality remaining to bolster the proposal.

One by one the reasons at first advanced by the President have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Only yesterday the clerk of the Supreme Court showed conclusively that there is no basis whatsoever for the charge of "congestion" leveled against the high tribunal by Mr. Roosevelt in his message of February 5. Another witness before the Senate Judiciary Committee finally disposed of the President's contention that there is any precedent in American history for the court-packing formula.

It is at this juncture, with Mr. Roosevelt's case shredding away like mist, that Senator Glass drives home his vigorous attack on "the repugnant scheme to disrupt representative government." The timing was excellent. The moment had come to call a spade a spade; to hurl back in demoralization those who have plotted "this unprecedented attempt to flank the Constitution."

In spite of the Administration's attempt to make it so—by use of patronage; by asserting that all criticism comes "from substantially the same elements" as opposed Mr. Roosevelt's re-election—the court issue has never been a partisan matter. By far the most effective opposition has come from within the President's party. And the most telling part of the broadcast made by Senator Glass was its recitation of the scrupulous regard of all great Democratic Presidents for the vital function of the Supreme Court. From Jefferson through Wilson none of them, the Senator showed, would have tolerated any attempt "to crowd into the court a lot of judicial marionettes to speak the ventriloquisms of the White House."

Senator Glass has spoken in the best traditions of his party. He has raised the standard which to many Democrats seems to be trailing in a mire of opportunism and palpably deceptive tactics. In many parts of the South the response to his plea is likely to be as definite and electric as the winged words of the senior Senator from the Old Dominion.

Supreme Test.

The first season of the Washington Civic Theater is drawing to a close. Ever since its opening night six months ago, when the curtain went up on "Caesar and Cleopatra," this clever group of thespians has furnished consistently good entertainment and diversified fare.

Washington drama lovers have put their seal of approval on these productions, both in the capacity of spectator and participant. The subscription list has mounted to 1,000 memberships and there is an active producing unit of 250 members who may be counted upon for anything from acting to moving props. The director and his assistants have stimulated this community interest with drama covering a wide range of interests.

Up to now this admirable enterprise has been exceedingly fortunate in its selection of plays and the adaptability of its players to them. Whether that will prove to be the case with the delicate subtleties of Christa Winsloe's "Maedchen in Uniform" is now to be seen. The play is certainly out of the range usually considered adaptable to nonprofessional presentation. But perhaps that is just the reason why the Civic Theater will launch it tonight.

It is reported that Ben Turpin is bankrupt and working at odd jobs in Hollywood to make a living. Ben's future may be dark, but as long as it's in front of him he'll never be able to see it.

"Millionaires failed to multiply in 1936," reports a statistician. And no wonder—Uncle Sam kept them too busy dividing.

A man can't win an argument with a woman, but he can break even by not saying anything.

Why is it that a prejudiced person isn't ever prejudiced along the same lines you are?

Prejudice is that which results when you make up your mind before you have anything to make it up with.

In Defense Of Mussolini.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a reader of your paper for over 10 years and have enjoyed it very much.

In today's edition I enjoyed reading Westbrook Pegler's column, "Fair Enough," on "Mussolini in Spain."

About a year ago it was Mussolini in Ethiopia, and all those so-called critics, (Pegler included), wrote that Italy was biting off more than she could chew. It would take so many years to win the nation couldn't stand it, and so on, as the Italian army is not what it is supposed to be.

But a year later those critics were very busy writing alibis. That was part of a malicious campaign to discredit Italy. Today part two is in full swing. They write in full letters "Italian army defeated in Spain," a disastrous defeat, the Italian army is only a myth, and, as Pegler writes, "is only good for parades." They don't say that they are volunteers fighting under Spanish generals, and they call it another Caporetto.

But if they stir their memory a bit deeper they find that after Caporetto comes Vittorio Veneto. To make up for their fiasco in part one, in part two they use this incident of the disastrous defeat to heap abuses on Italy. So the same clique —England, France, Russia and some of our critics—are at it again.

They play up the Ethiopian massacre at Addis Ababa and the English are shocked, but they need not fear, because the crown of champion slaughterers rests securely on their head.

Dogs bark at trains, thinking they will get scared and stop. That is how they live. A. CARTA.

Reply To Dr. Knott.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I should like to say to Dr. J. O. Knott, writer of a letter on Justice McReynolds' use of the objectionable term "darkey," that its use by certain Negroes, whether in speech or song, does not remove its opprobriousness. Is it not a mark of refinement and culture to avoid the use of epithetic expressions objectionable to others?

Further, a logical person would hardly concede an analogy between the use of the two terms, "Pat" and "darkey," assuming he knew the origins of the two.

As to the idealistic possibility of the Supreme Court rendering all decisions in favor of Negroes in cases involving them, men of Dr. Knott's style of reasoning overlook a very important fact where the Negro is concerned. It is this, that in "Southern" cases, where two or more opinions are possible, the tendency is to render the one most calculated to salve Southern feelings, regardless of the future effect upon the Negro. It was that possibility, among others, that aroused so much opposition to the Court nominee, Judge Parker, some years ago. JAMES L. RODGERS.

Strikes And Taxes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Answering "Disgusted" who writes in the March 26 issue, "All strikes are unnecessary if the causes can be remedied."

Former Senator Pettigrew, of Idaho, who was a legislator for 40 years, said, "Labor has had no decent legislation for the whole 40 years I have been active in office."

Labor, with the shackles somewhat loosened, can be likened to a starving dog being fed.

I believe that labor will gain nothing by the strikes, as raises in salary or wages will be eaten up by the other fellow's taxes passed on to labor.

Thirty-three and one-third per cent of the laborer's dollar is taken from him, paying somebody else's taxes. I give ground to none on this statement. So far all he could do was to strike, as that has been what he had been led to do. My advice to "Disgusted" would be to get a copy of H. R. 3297, introduced by Representative Usher L. Burdick, of North Dakota.

Then he will see the solution of strikes. It's labor's bill and the manufacturers' bill combined.

Traffic Vs. Contamination.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I never come to town but what I see in the paper, on the screen or on signs, details of your various drives to stop traffic deaths; also long lists of arrests of speeding drivers.

Personally, I'd much rather take my chances on not being a traffic fatality than the awful chances a person takes in local restaurants and tap rooms (bars, if you please). It seems their idea of sanitary washing is to dip the article in cold water.

In fact, I prefer an auto death to the lingering illness possible from such contamination, and I can see the one coming, which is more than can be said for the other.

More On Burlesque.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A recent subscriber, in his defense of the "art" of burlesque, draws an appealing picture of tired, and, I suppose, philanthropic and venerable old business men trooping, on occasion, to Col. Lake's playhouse, there to rub elbows with the proletariat in quest of their ideal of artistic entertainment. He is mistaken, first of all, in presuming that where you find Mr. Lake, there you must necessarily find each member of the proletariat.

It is a sad fact that poverty and the lack of proper education do contribute to the hold which burlesque has upon certain people. And it is noteworthy that burlesque always originates in the dingiest and most neglected sections of large cities. But there are still many of the humble proletariat who eye this type of production with undisguised contempt.

And then there was his description of art as "any representation which, upon being observed, has the faculty of exciting the emotions of the observer." This definition applies equally well to the sadist when he skins a cat or murders a little girl; for his emotions are certainly excited—and this example is not too inappropriate, for it is generally admitted that the lower forms of eroticism are closely allied to sadism, the delight in causing pain.

As for the report that a mourned jurist chuckled to himself that incongruous line concerning his low tastes—if true, it still is beside the point. Just as the proletariat has no corner on evil, jurists have no corner on good. As an old Greek thinker observed, the job does not make the man.

Then, though the comparison is almost too ridiculous to merit recognition, he mentions Shakespeare and some lesser authors as comrades in arms with Minsky and Ann Corio. There is, however a great gulf between literature and burlesque—literature portrays life as it is, and no one will deny that life is sometimes seamy. But burlesque deliberately and calculatingly works to arouse the lowest passions, and, what is worse, to isolate them from the finer feelings.

This overwhelming of the finer by the baser faculties is the essence of every lustful exhibition. A man loses his dignity as a man when he surrenders himself to the tinseled filth of burlesque. Decency forbids the exact and detailed indictment of what is the substantial wickedness of such performances. But it may be pointed out that the peace and happiness of every community rests upon the ability to appeal to these finer feelings; and of all the agencies that work to destroy them, burlesque is almost undeniably at the top.

And as for the weight of authority behind us—the defender of burlesque has a jurist behind him thanking God for his low tastes, though he should know that every man has both low tastes and high tastes, and it is the glory of most men that they subdue the low and exalt the high. But I, in condemning it, am backed by all of Christianity saying in a clear voice that lust is a deadly sin.

"A Hundred Years Ago."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While looking over a pile of newspapers the other day I happened to pick up a copy of The Washington Post of February 28, 1937, and I was immediately attracted by the feature page entitled "Last Week . . . A Hundred Years Ago," by Joseph Reed.

I found the content most interesting and instructive and I want to congratulate both you and Mr. Reed on what I consider a splendid example of newspaper enterprise. I could wish that this feature might be made available to readers in other sections of the country, and especially appropriate for such wide dissemination is the editorial on "Congress" which Mr. Reed has included in his collected data. Such items as this are most informative and helpful in orienting the public mind in times such as we are now passing through, and again I compliment you on featuring this page as you apparently are doing.

J. T. HARRIS.

Cleveland, Ohio, March 25.

Let's Forget The Civil War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Will somebody please inform the South that the Civil War is over? This is the United States of America, not the Confederacy. We are living in the present, not the past, and the Nation as a whole should look to the future with today's optimism. The South is behind times with its pre-Civil War sensiments still popping up with unreasonable requests, petitions and demands to soothe its sensitive feelings.

Take the recent Texas Exposition —the Daughters of the Confederacy protested the placing of "Buffalo Bill" Cody's statue in one of the buildings on the ground that he was a Union spy. The recent outburst because of the picture of Gen. William Sherman was placed on a 3-cent stamp issue. And would you hear the indignant protests from that section of the country when a recent 4-cent stamp issue carried the picture of Robert E. Lee with only two stars on his collar, denoting rank of lieutenant general.

Is the South like a little baby; does one have to cater to its slightest whim? Maybe some day it will outgrow its infancy and learn a little self-control. If the other sections of the country acted like that there would be a storm of protest against the issuance of stamps carrying the likeness of men who revolted against their country, who were rebels and traitors.

Lee was a high officer in the United States Army and what did he do? He used the knowledge gained from that very same military body to fight against it. He could not place pride in back of national need. He refused a position of trust and honor for his country to take a generalship in the Confederate army.

What would happen if the postoffice issued stamps carrying likenesses of officers of the English army of Revolutionary days or War of 1812? Or of the enemy officers of the Spanish-American War or other like events. There would be a storm of protest from Coast to Coast, from North to South, and justly so. The different posts of the G. A. R. and other branches of organizations created from the Union side of the Civil War would set up a howl to high heaven if they acted the way the South has.

The North has forgotten that war, being too busy with the present and the future to make any fuss over the past. To justify the 4-cent Army stamp issue is almost the same as demanding stamps in commemoration of enemy military heads. Why not issue one with the picture of Benedict Arnold on it? He was a traitor to his country.

Perhaps the South has yet to learn how to "take it."

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Lawlessness.

A few years ago there was a gaudy two-passenger lynching in San Jose, Calif., which provoked me to say that there were two murderers at least who would not be turned loose on the country after 10 or 15 years to do it again.

The country was pretty well fed up on murder and the technical escapes for murderers provided by shysters of high and low degree and by political intervention.

It was my idea that the mob at San Jose just went nuts for an hour in exasperation over the law's failure in matters of this kind, and a failure which was illustrated by the presence in the same jail of another murderer who had killed a farmer and escaped his just owings with a second degree conviction, which in most States means a dozen or 14 years.

Well, then it happened. All the coffee-room philosophers and shaggy thinkers of the butchers' paper magazines dusted off their big foreign words, and all the flat-heeled intellects of the female auxiliary came storming down the street heaving bricks of indignation and scorn. The high note of their cry was the sanctity of the law, orderly procedure and the disruptive force of lawless action, although most of them had been drunk often enough on illegal hootch during prohibition.

I was a long time combing the mortar and shattered bottle glass out of my hair, and I still wear some of the knobs they raised, but I never entertained the idea that I might be wrong until just lately.

And now how do you do? For I find all of them trying to crawl into my bed, a none too toothsome lot, and if you will be good enough to avert your gaze a moment I will pull on my pants and haul out.

Now I find them all cheering the lawlessness of the sit-down strike on the ground that this violation of law, this defiance of the courts and other constituted authority, this lynching of government in the United States is the revolutionary action of American labor, although the American Federation of Labor explicitly repudiates the sit-down and the big General Motors strike, at least, was the act of a minority.

American labor is a big term. It includes millions of unorganized working people and millions of others who belong to unions, but aren't orators or parliamentarians and have little or nothing to say about the actions of the smart professionals who run their affairs. It also includes that majority of the General Motors employes who wanted to work but could not because the minority violated not only the property right of the company but the recently popular property right of their fellow workman in his job.

I find that my new bedfellows also tolerate in print the repudiation of legal contracts either by candid refusal or by the most cynical and dishonest sabotage, even though the contracts were dictated by the union leaders themselves and are thoroughly agreeable to the rank and file. There is a lot of ham and a good deal of Tammany in the smart labor leader. He knows how to pour it on the boys in meeting and create false presumption that they are dirty finks if they vote against his proposition, however wrong they know him to be.

He also knows all the smart parliamentary fast ones, the art of conceaing a sleeper in the language of a resolution and something about timing and the inertia of the rahk and file who go to meetings only when they suspect that there is something up.

He doesn't show too much respect for their intelligence.

This sort of thing I now read from those who were heaving the chimney at me, a brick at a time, a few years ago for my having said that the San Jose lynching represented a momentary revolution of the people of the town against the habitual failure of the law in murder cases.

And even though some admit that the sit-down and repudiation are respectively illegal and dishonest, do you know how they justify that? They say it is the only way to meet the illegal and dishonest methods of the big employers.

Hell's bells, Comrades, aint that just what I said about the lynchings?

Maybe the wheel has come a full turn after all this time and I now am right, but, remembering those bricks and those big greasy words like "ideology" and "intellectual integrity," I'd rather be wrong than room-mate.

Where's my pants?

The Once Over

Women, Arise!

H. I. Phillips.

"Ethiopia no longer exists . . . Think only of our love!" This, among many similar messages found on a woman recently arrested for taking a pot shot at a European ambassador, has stirred the world and is resulting in something of a demand for spreading the idea. A light and ecstatic touch is cheering to a world sunk in a mood of efficiency, materialism and strife.

* * * *

This department urges the women of the world to rally to the cause of a more cheerful civilization and restore a sense of proportion to a cockeyed planet by addressing tender messages to the great of the earth. Sentimental, sugary little things that will make the headlines bearable.

* * * *

Things like "Forget the Manchurian crisis . . . I love you," "Stop worrying over frontiers . . . Love and kisses," and "Why worry over the Mediterranean? . . . We have each other."

* * * *

A man gets up in the morning, grabs his paper and what does he read? Headlines teetering with sadness and disaster. No love anywhere. Suppose as he dug at his grapefruit the front page bore the news of scented letters to Stalin, such as, "Japan is a figment of the imagination . . . Kiss me, my fool" . . .

A Mid-Week Review of Current Publications

A Texan in Paris

By William Rickel

IF you were to make a list of the ten best novels since 1920, you would find that on the basis of worth they fell into two groups and that the distinguishing mark between them, while obvious as you read them, would be hard to explain. Vaguely, the one group, including "The Magic Mountain," "Of Human Bondage," "Man's Fate," "Remembrance of Things Past," and perhaps "Point Counter Point," would possess some quality that lifted their events, characters and observations into the area of universal acceptance, which would be novelty. The other group, as the "Studs Lonigan Trilogy," "In Dubious Battle," "Sing Before Breakfast," by McHugh; "Call It Sleep," by Roth or any number of competent novels, reveal the authors unable to push beyond their material.

And you'd be uncomfortably aware that you might run into either the events or the characters at any time and would not know what to do or think about them. The painful indecisions of the latter authors would also have been transferred to you; while the uninhibited vision of the former would leave you only the residium which is art, which would draw together rather than divide your heart.

Edwin Lanham, descendant of an early pioneer family of Texas, has just written his third novel, "Banner at Daybreak," a work which, like "Man's Fate," falls into the first category of novels. The often diffuse writing of the second sort has a greater immediacy and scope, and "Banner at Daybreak" has that virtue also. On its huge canvas, where everything is tightly drawn without a wasted stroke or syllable of color, are depicted the problems, indecisions, variety of characters you'd meet if you had lived in Paris during the past six years, if you'd drunk from every bar in Greenwich Village, if you'd suffered the depression and the duststorms in Texas, where the older generation still believed valid the old way of living. But "Banner at Daybreak," with all the faults of this virtue of range and richness, somehow seems to be thrown into such a perspective, through Lanham's manipulation of events and people, that more than any recent novel it suggests and equals Malraux's work.

AT 15 the author worked his way around the world, and ten years later published in France his experiences in "Sailor's Don't Care"—later expurgated and published in New York City. Aside from its early recognition of the really ignoble role that sailors play aboard a ship, it was a trivial, unpromising work, strident in its search for realism.

"The Wind Blew West," 1935, with the same realism and color and brimming over with happenings, characters and material, gave a rich and historically accurate portrayal of the Texas of the '70s, when Indians still scalped settlers, the railroads were pushing through to the Pacific. Beyond scope, accuracy and craftsmanship this novel was unexceptional.

Now in "Banner at Daybreak" you meet the grandson of Amon Hall, the pioneer lawyer about whom centered the often melodramatic action of "The Wind Blew West;" Clay Hall, who spent four years studying art in France, who witnessed the riots in Paris and Clichy after L'Affaire Stavisky, who finally married Hilda James, another student from New Hampshire, who returned to New York City, where his exhibition is a failure, and who at last goes back to Texas to run his grandfather's ranch.

HERE amid duststorms, depression foreclosures and fire, Clay comes under the dominance of his grandfather, Amon, who calls Hilda "a troublemaker" because she opposes his greed. In this struggle becomes apparent the great difference between the world with which his ancestors coped and conquered and the world with which the present generation grapples and often cannot conquer or even understand.

This is the theme, this is the heart, this is the soul of "Banner at Daybreak;" it is what makes it an electrifying novel to read (and, incidentally, makes it a sequel to "The Wind Blew West"); all the problems, all the indecisions, all the resigned courage with which people face a civilization that is no longer just Rutherford, Tex., Greenwich Village, Clichy, or any small town, but which is at once the entire world . . . individualism versus a tendency toward participation in group action; the past against the present, and recall "what is past is prelude."

But though Edwin Lanham is dealing with such contemporary and opinionated material, the material of the second sort of novel, yet his clear style, his third-person impartiality, his complete objectivity that somehow seems to be his inheritance from the clear air of Texas—Hilda calls Texas that "extrovert country"—that complete lack of propaganda hoists "Banner at Daybreak" into that first group of novels. At times his vision does falter, he looks too externally upon the inward struggles of the soul which our present dilemmas engender, he packs so much in his book, so many things happen coincidentally, and events begin to take on a melodramatic twist, the ugly twist of accidence.

Yet who does not recall in "The Magic Mountain" that famous duel between Hans Castorp and Herr Settembrini? It has the same melodramatic leer. Yet were the reader thereby to miss reading "Banner at Daybreak," he would have missed a great statement of society today, would have overlooked a provocative novel.

Dialogue And Sets By Coward

Theater's White-Haired Boy Gives an Accounting of Himself.

By Bett Hooper.

At the age of 6, Noel Coward bit his English teacher's arm through to the bone over a slight difference of opinion in grammar. At the age of 8 he hit a little girl in his neighborhood over the head with a spade because she forgot her lines in a tragedy he had written. At the age of 38 he has written an autobiography from the contents of which it is easy to see that he has not yet outgrown his boyish habits of taking a crack at those whom he does not like. "I was also uncompromising in my attitude towards people I disliked," says Mr. Coward, in "Present Indicative." And for a man who is not generally given to understatement, this is a gem indeed.

From the time, as Mr. Coward says, he "was photographed naked on a cushion very early in life, an insane, toothless smile slitting my face and pleats of fat overlapping me like an ill-fitting overcoat," until now, when he has been the subject of every smart photographer from Mayfair to Park avenue, he has been acutely conscious of the "present indicative." And why not? Certainly he is the white-haired boy of the theatrical century. Energy and ambition rode him like an old man of the sea from the moment he first appeared in public at the age of 6 and sang "Coo" from "The Country Girl."

MASTER COWARD.

Eleven years later the cocoon of nonentity still enshrouded him though he had accomplished more in that time than most of Alger's heroes ever did. "A sense of frustration oppressed me," Coward records. "Here I was, 17 years old, bursting with remarkable talent, a witty and delightful companion, with an interesting if not actually good-looking face and an excellent figure, just wasting time, treading water, not getting anywhere."

It was about this time that the youthful actor's chief ambition seems to have been to know theatrical stars by their Christian names. He faithfully records all those whom he came to know a few years later and remembers that at that time he had them classified as to the degree of intimacy he had attained with them. Some he knew well; with Maughan, Walpole and others he was "on pleasant but not intimate terms," and with still others such as Galsworthy, du Maurier and Lynn Fontanne he was only on nodding acquaintance. This last name, he says, was "insignificant then and belonged to a scraggy, friendly girl with intelligent brown eyes and a raucous laugh."

With Mr. Coward's avowed penchant, then, for knowing the sort of people who were in the news, it seems a little paradoxical that he gets so impatient with those who would like to be on more than a "nodding acquaintance" with him. The lady who falls under his most stinging rebuke in this respect is Ethel Mannin, English authoress.

THE VORTEX

A Play by NOEL COWARD

With the author in the leading role as played by him for a year in London

Advertisement which appeared in The Post, September, 1925.

Coward speaks of a brief introduction to her and then says "I met her again many years afterward at a literary dinner party given by Mr. George Doran; and was flattered to discover, upon reading her book, "Confessions and Impressions," recently, that these two brief encounters had obviously constituted, in her mind, a delightful intimacy." Skimming through Miss Mannin's book, which came out in 1930, I find that she refers to Noel Coward as "a tall pale young man" with the "near genius that Ivor Novello and Beverley Nichols also have." And of Coward at Mr. Doran's party, Miss Mannin states that she found him "quite unchanged, the same gushing manner," and the appearance of "one of the early Roman satyrs."

In May, 1921, Noel Coward with a "bundle of manuscripts, a one-way ticket, and only 17 pounds to spare," set sail for this country. He all but stepped off the boat into a theater so anxious was he to see how we do things on the stage. "Nice People," starring Francine Larrimore and including among the minor parts Tallulah Bankhead and Katherine Cornell, was the play he was lucky enough to see first. But all in all, it was a forlorn summer. He knew few people, his money was running short, and all the theatrical managers were away for the hot season. He and Ronald Colman, who also was quite discouraged with his reception in America, consoled each other.

Three years later, he again sailed for New York but this time he came in state on the Olympic. The press was beginning to hail him as promising; he had several successful plays running in London; Charlotts Revue with his music and lyrics was enjoying a popular run in New York and he was able to renew several old friendships, spending the majority of his time with Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne. Alfred Lunt's dressing room jitters are dwelt upon in length and even Coward's own are touched upon. "In 'Design for Living' we all three gave the worst performances of our careers every night together for months, and managed to be very good indeed."

But Noel Coward's progress was not all uphill. In fact, there were long periods when he appeared to be making remarkable progress in the other direction. People stood up in their stalls at the opening night of "Sirocco" and booed him for ten minutes without stopping. Audiences that had been accustomed to going to his dressing room almost en masse haughtily pulled their ermine coats around them and rode away in Hispano Suizas without even a "Sorry, old man." And though as he says, "the reconstruction of despair is difficult," he manages to give a pretty gloomy picture of the months he spent in Honolulu ridding himself of the cloudiness on his lungs which had shown up unmistakably on an X-ray photograph.

Washingtonians will find an extra warm spot in their hearts for Mr. Coward when they read his description of this city in summertime. "I have sweated through steamy tropical forests and across arid burning deserts, but never yet, in any equatorial hell, have I sweated as I sweated in Washington in September, 1925. The city felt as though it were dying. There was no breeze, no air, not even much sun. Just a dull haze of breathless discomfort through which the noble buildings could be discerned, gasping, like nude old gentlemen in a steam room."

BABY COWARD.

Mr. Coward goes on to say of that week: "The only coolness in that unpleasant week was supplied by the press." Shuffling through The Washington Post to verify this, I find that our drama critic at that time stated of "The Vortex's "At the outset it is about the slowest moving vehicle that ever unlimbered on any stage . . . Since 'The Vortex' is strictly a play of perverted emotions it should have a successful New York run."

Fate set a rather shabby stage for the advent of Baby Coward on the morning of December 16, 1899. But how could Fate be expected to know, any more than the agencies that turned him down in his search for parts, that the young Noel Coward was destined to become THE Mr. Coward? At any rate, life for him became exceedingly more amusing in the second act. This, I think, was entirely due to the fact that Mr. Coward had learned to talk and read and write by that time and so able to inject his own lines into the drama of life as he found it.

Noel Coward is rather like the little girl in the poem. When he's good, he's very, very good, and when he's bad, he's horrid. But paraphrasing his lines about "Design for Living," even though Mr. Coward gave the "worst performance" of his career every night for months, I still think he'd manage "to be very good indeed."

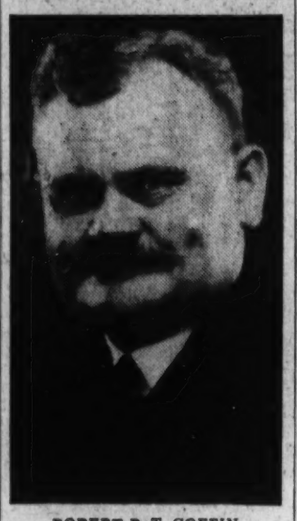
Core of New England

By Frederick L. Gwynn

WHEN a man, especially a poet, wins a Pulitzer Prize, he usually follows up with a bad book. Not so with Robert P. Tristram Coffin. His "Saltwater Farm" is an authentically robust and as beautifully nostalgic as was "Strange Holiness," which won him the poetry prize for 1936. In keeping with the people and things he loves best, Coffin's song is once more, "Rura cano"—Vergil's manifesto which Herrick adopted, and which Coffin puts into these opening words:

This is my country, bitter as the sea,
Pungent with the fir and the bayberry.

The country is Maine and the particular locale is a saltwater farm. J. J. Lankes' excellent woodcuts show the miracle of this type of farm, which is found at its best in Maine: Apple trees, plough furrows and haying all in sight and smell of the salt ocean; "white sails shining through apple boughs" is what you see down here. Thus there is something apart, an elemental something about the people who live on these farms, and indeed, about Mr. Coffin's verse itself. These people lead a rather "amphibious" life, spiritually, having salt and soil mixed in their blood. There is something Homeric in them, a good deal of Anglo-Saxon, and yet they are essentially American—important vertebrae in the national back bone.



ROBERT P. T. COFFIN.

Mr. Coffin's individual poetic qualities are well known. Few poets today write with such undisguised vigor, such sincerity, and such satisfying clarity. His metres and rhymes are technically perfect, if they are somewhat monosyllabic at times. Coffin's knowledge of his subject is, of course, unquestioned. When he describes some tom-cats as being "Contented as a squash-vine bee," he is as naturally accurate as Herrick. When he notices that "The morning sky shuts down blue around you," or speaks of "the long, cool whisper of the scythe," he is as poetically complete as Robinson.

Indeed, there is something of E. A. R. in Mr. Coffin, especially in the intuitive and almost mystic feeling for character. Thief Jones ("Thief ate his victuals by himself"), Dan Wholebrook and his "star-pudding," John Popham with "a face like leather," and the myriad unnamed hardy men and spirited boys who people the saltwater farms—these are memorable characters of a strange vitality. On the other hand, it must be mentioned that sometimes a character has a little too much of the autobiographical tinge about him to be truly artistic; one is reminded of Thomas Wolfe's current novel, "Nun Will Ich Ihnen 'Was Sagen.'"

BUT Mr. Coffin is first of all a lyric poet, not a dramatic one, though his verse could stand a stronger dose of dramatic technique. Probably the major part of his lyric gift consists of his faculty for startling phrasing which is none the less convincing. He speaks of cider-pressers who "pour old sunlight into hollow wood," of nights when "you hear the blue stars snap," of children who have "a hair two shades of honey." These are a high species of poetic expression, indicative of the author's wealth of incisive poetic experience. Note the feeling of slow, unweeting time with which Coffin has informed a description of graveyard trees:

Here roots that waited outside have come,
Some have tipped the stones, and some
Have dug down deep to the things they feared
Years, years ago, when this plot was cleared.

* * * *

AND no one has written better of Maine than Mr. Coffin. No other State is like Maine, and no other men and women like its men and women.

These are my people, saving of emotion,

They know that nations always fall and rise
By such things as the crusts of apple pies.

This comes from the last poem in the book, "Tipsham Foreside," a piece 13 pages long which states Mr. Coffin's credo and manifesto. It is a good piece, though the Macmillan reader called it mere doggerel, because it is an affirmation of faith. This is what we demand of a true poet—that he have a consummate faith in something, besides having a gift of poetic apprehension. And like Vergil singing "Rura cano" when the rura was disappearing, Coffin mourns the disappearing Maine and thunders at the

Families who built their fortunes on condemned
Rifles in the Civil War, have hemmed
The beaches off, and bask in buttered ease;

A poet naturally writes well about things he likes best. Perhaps in that very word "best" lie the major success and minor failure of this book. For Mr. Coffin's utterly genuine love for the things of earth and for the vibrations of Maine's nature often betrays him into the pathetic fallacy of expressing too much of this love. Thus it is that a certain prodigality of epithet, recapitulation of imagery, and mere repetition of words often dulls the otherwise stunning effect of the poetry. Doubtless, the fact that the author writes a great quanity of verse has something to do with this. And yet, in that very fact we may give boundless thanks; because poets and poetry today are losing bulk, the hope for poetry of strength and faith in life as it should be lived lies in such men as Robert P. Tristram Coffin. "Saltwater Farm" has strength and faith, as well as good poetry.

"STILL IS THE SUMMER NIGHT," by August Derleth. (Scribner's, $2.50).

Life in Wisconsin in the 1830s must have been delightful, especially if one happened to own a farm on the edge of a small town like Sac Prairie. As August Derleth has pictured that life in "Still Is the Summer Night," it was a sort of age of innocence in the Middle West. The United States was still in the making. The Civil War was only 20 years away and its veterans made a picturesque addition to the community. Indians visited the town occasionally, not with the intention of scalping the inhabitants but rather with the idea of getting small handouts from the housewives. The countryside is described at all seasons of the year with a sure and loving touch. The book was written by a man deeply and sincerely in love with nature and with a warm interest in his fellow men.

In fact, although the novel has a plot, and a pretty exciting one, it is the background that makes the strongest impression on the reader. This means not only the physical background, the farm, the river and the hills, but the secondary characters as well. For the most part they are authentic and interesting.

Little attention is paid to the seamy side of farm life. Either there was no farm problem then, or, the men of the Halder family knew how to cope with it effectively. They worked tirelessly and efficiently all day and yet they had time and energy for show boats, for loafing in town and even for getting into the kind of trouble that sets a watchful small town to gossiping.

The principal characters are posed against this background. Ratio is the erring husband, Julie is the patient wife and Alton is Ratio's brother and Julie's lover. It is the old familiar triangle. Ratio strays into town, Alton and Julie find their happiness together.

Their love for each other is subjected to the most soul-searching analysis, which slows up the action of the book. Both were fully conscious of their sin and both thought long and hard about it. In contrast to the long preparation, the denouement comes swiftly, excitingly and credibly. Ratio is drowned and Alton and Julie are at last free to marry.

With a philosophy a little unexpected in a young man of 28, for that is the author's age, Mr. Derleth has included a prologue in which Alton, grown old, looks back on those earlier years. He realizes then, that though he lived long and pleasantly with Julie, it was in the early days that he had known the greatest happiness "in the brief stolen hours before he had taken her hand in his and put the ring there."

Mr. Derleth plans to make this novel one of a group with his own town and State as a background, giving a unified historical picture of the community. "Still Is the Summer Night" has so many elements of strength in it that its successors should be looked forward to with great interest.

RUTH MONTGOMERY.

Indians

"A CONTINENT LOST—A CIVILIZATION WON," by J. P. Kinney. (Johns Hopkins Press.)

This book dealing mainly with Indian land tenure in America, necessarily treats on the Indian problem which was started by the earliest settlers on the Atlantic coast.

The author, an employe of the Indian Service for many years, has delved deeply into hitherto unexplored records in the Indian Bureau and has turned up a mass of fresh historical material. Much of it bears on the efforts of the whites to possess the lands of the Indians, and how the latter were forced westward by the legislative and executive branches of the Government. Doubtless many readers will be surprised to learn that the removal of the red men west of the Mississippi was considered by President Jefferson and his colleagues prior to 1803.

The author, with fresh eyes and an unbiased judgment, clearly traces the reasons for the vascillating, or trial and error, policies followed by the Government in seeking to civilize and Christianize the Indian and at the same time to protect his property from spoliation by the whites.

It is regretted that the limited scope of the book did not permit the author to treat of the tribal claims of the Indians against the United States. Many of these long-standing claims are founded in equity, and should receive a proper hearing in our courts if the judiciary is to give, "Equal Justice to All."

The book is rich in historical data, and should prove most valuable to every serious student and well-wisher of the Indian. Truly a much needed addition to our libraries.

Quintuplets

"I WOULD BE PRIVATE," by Rose Macauley. (Harper's, $2.50)

According to statistics, quintuplets occur once in every five million births, or is it five hundred million? At any rate the problem of retaining any semblance of privacy with quints in the family is hardly a general one—still no parent whose blessed events arrive singly or in pairs or trips or quads can afford to miss "I Would Be Private."

Ronald McBrown, a four-square London bobby with a very real feeling for justice is considerably inconvenienced when Win, his young wife, presents him with three boys and two girls all at one fell swoop. At first the harassed papa hopes to keep the whole embarrassing thing dark by taking only two of the children out at a time. "It would just look like the same two over and over." But the public, the press and the grandmother care not at all for the McBrown sensibilities.

The McBrowns, refusing to admit the inevitability of their fame, seek privacy among the black natives of the Caribbean, where maybe five children exactly the same age will be taken as a matter of course. Papagayo, their destination of fading hopes, is reached at last. The little family is received enthusiastically, by dark crowds giggling, gasping. Excursions are speedily organized from near by islands and there is every reason to expect the tourist trade from Haiti and Santo Domingo, even the United States. It becomes very much the thing to go "quinning." The McBrowns consider fleeing to Canada, to the South Seas, to Lapland. But what would be the use? It is growing even more apparent that only with a regulated "so much a peek" is there chance for peace of any sort. And so the weary parents succumb and Papagayo booms.

Excursion Into Biography

In Mr. Priestley's new book, "Midnight on the Desert" he fulfills his ambition to be an "all-round man of letters on the eighteenth century plan, which allowed a man to write essay or poem, novel or play, just as he pleased." To a long list of novels, plays and criticism, Mr. Priestley now adds an "Excursion into Autobiography During a Winter in America" under the title, "Midnight on the Desert." Sitting in a lonely cabin in Arizona, he presents his ideas on America and contemporary life in the form of reminiscences inspired by a spring cleaning of his files. This device, which is intended to give continuity to a heterogeneous collection of ideas, is not as successful as straight autobiographical comment would have been. The reader is continually shunted back and forth from poignant bits of criticism to a rendezvous with Mr. Priestley in his cabin where he is obliged to wait until Mr. Priestley relights his pipe or comments on the cold coming through the cracks.

Mr. Priestley's attitude as a traveler is a very refreshing change from the average critique of America that is published by a foreign writer whose travels in this country are limited to a cursory glance at the Atlantic seaboard with possibly a glimpse of the Ford Factory and Niagara Falls. Mr. Priestley journeyed from New York to California with his wife, six children, and a nurse, which, as he points out, "does not suggest much dislike of the country."

Describing himself, he says: "I have a sincere and deep interest in the American scene. I have been critical of American life, but only as I have been critical of any life I have ever known, because such is my nature: but I have never been supercilious and patronizing." Such an attitude convinces the reader of the author's attempt to evaluate honestly, and therein lies the success of the book. Having gained our confidence, Mr. Priestley can speak frankly, and we will listen attentively.

Occasionally Mr. Priestley's frankness in belittling himself becomes too self-conscious and the reader finds himself embarrassed by this too obvious self-revelation, as well as a bit skeptical of its sincerity. An even greater doubt begins to dawn when Mr. Priestley attempts to adopt the American vernacular by using such expressions as "it is durned good of me."

These are small debits, however, in comparison to Mr. Priestley's credits. His comments are shrewd and illuminating on a variety of topics, including the theater, political organization in America, education, the cultural life, current literature, his own "Liberal-Socialist State" and innumerable other contemporary subjects. Of most timely interest are those in which Mr. Priestley develops his theory that America is a land of cooperation and not individualism. "It is not," he says, "by what a single person can accomplish, but always by what can be done by collective effort that America has always shown herself so new, formidable and fascinating." The average American "has no objection to mass movement." "Nearly everything he does is done about the same time by a million others." In this country economic and political theory are at variance with the trend of social tendencies and this very divergence, Mr. Priestley maintains, may be one explanation for the nervous strain of modern life.

Gently coursing through such stimulating but comparatively simple ideas the reader is suddenly inducted into a discussion of the time theory as projected by Ouspensky and Dunne. From this point on the going is rather heavy, but well worth the trouble if the mind is alert at the moment. With this one exception, however, the subject matter is very catholic and should appeal to every reader.

Considering the bulk of Mr. Priestley's work, I think this latest book will rank as his best with the thinking public, and will add to the reputation he established with "English Journey."

Clash on Legality Of Sit-Down Strike Renewed in House

By the Associated Press.

Argument over sit-down strikes broke out anew in the House yesterday with Representative Coffee (Democrat), of Washington, defending them as legal and Representative Cooley (Democrat), of North Carolina, assailing them as a "dramatization of crime."

President Roosevelt declined at his press conference to comment on the strikes, but told reporters that this new labor technique had been discussed at Saturday's conference with Congressional leaders.

Two California Democrats jumped into the House discussion in reply to Cooley. Representative Scott said the "barrage against sit-down strikes is a barrage against trade unionism itself."

Representative Voorhis declared workers must be recognized on a "basis of equality" with their employers. "We are witnessing the birth of a new relationship between employe and employer," he said.

Air Safety Power Transfer Is Asked

By the Associated Press.

A congressional committee heard suggestions yesterday that safety regulation of air lines be transferred from the Department of Commerce to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Representative Cole (Democrat), Maryland, told the House Interstate Commerce Committee he believed the public is more interested now in regulation of air lines from the standpoint of safety than from that of rates and service.

His observation was made during questioning of Joseph B. Eastman, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who approved the Lea bill to place interstate air carriers under regulation of the commission.

Pointing out that the measure kept safety regulation under the Commerce Department, Representative Wadsworth (Republican), New York, also a committee member, joined Cole in the opinion the commission should have complete control.

Saito Calls Japan's Policies Peaceful

By the United Press.

New York, March 30.—Japan's naval policy is one of "non-menace and non-aggression" and the Japanese government will not participate in any naval race, Hirosi Saito, Ambassador to the United States, told the Japan Society tonight.

In a message prepared for delivery at the society's annual banquet, Saito said the established policy of Japan was "unmistakably * * * like that of the United States, one only of defense." He added:

"The standing army of Japan numbers 250,000 men. That of Russia is said to be a million. And in China, if all the forces of the warlords were combined, the total number of armed men would be over 2,000,000. * * * I think the question may be fairly asked, 'Which of these nations is the most highly militarized?'"

G-Man Discounts Trip by Hoover In Mattson Case

Tucumcari, N. Mex., March 30 (AP). Breaking his silence in the case of Vern Charlton, Seattle man held here for questioning in connection with the kidnap-slaying of Charles Mattson, Alex Street, Department of Justice agent, late today discounted reports Director J. Edgar Hoover was coming here.

"If Mr. Hoover is coming here," he said, "I don't know anything about it and I'm pretty sure I would know about it if he was."

Contradicting an opinion expressed earlier today by Sheriff Fred White that "we expect this thing will be cleared up by tonight," Street said there probably will be nothing to announce until tomorrow.

He said Department of Justice men in Washington are checking all information given them, including fingerprints, specimens of handwriting believed to be that of the suspect and photographs of him.

Robert Collins, Noted Foreign Reporter, Dies

By the Associated Press.

Bournemouth, England, March 30. Robert Moore Collins, 69, Associated Press correspondent in Europe and the Far East for 28 years, died today after a long illness.

Noted for his distinguished work in the World War and on other great news events, Collins was head of the London bureau of the Associated Press from 1907 until 1925, when he was stricken with paralysis.

The American Correspondents Association in London adopted resolutions of condolence.

Robert Moore Collins was born in Washington, D. C., Christmas Day, 1867. He graduated from Middlebury College, in Vermont, in 1889, and the same year started his career as a reporter for the Akron (Ohio) Daily Beacon.

He later worked for The Washington Post and in 1893 joined the Associated Press. His first foreign assignment was to London in 1897.

Collins covered the Philippine Insurrection, the Chinese Boxer Rebellion and the Russo-Japanese War in which he distinguished himself for bravery.

Much of the burden of World War news coverage was borne by Collins in his post as head of the London bureau.

When Gen. Pershing crossed the Atlantic in 1917, Collins was among the correspondents who went to Liverpool to greet him. The general came ashore, his eyes scanning the crowd for a familiar face. Then he caught sight of Collins.

"Why, Bobby—Bobby Collins! You'he getting bald, Bobby," the general greeted his old friend, and whisked Collins away to London with him. Gen. Pershing and Collins were friends during the Philippine campaign.

NOW ON DISPLAY—THE Plus-Powered Kelvinator

FACT 1
● The new Kelvinator is Plus-Powered. It has as much as double the cooling capacity of other well-known refrigerators of equal size.
FACT 2
● The new Kelvinator runs only half as many minutes per day—during the rest of the time it maintains low temperatures, using no current at all.

Only Kelvinator gives you all these advantages

RUBBER GRIDS IN ALL ICE TRAYS... Kelvinator's plus power gives abundant reserve capacity to provide as much ice as you'll ever need.

CERTIFICATE OF LOW OPERATING COST... Kelvinator's plus power assures less running time each day... only Kelvinator gives you a Certificate of Low Cost of Operation.

5-YEAR PROTECTION PLAN... Kelvinator's plus power unit runs less time at slower speed—years of dependable service—certified with a Five-Year Protection Plan.

THESE are the two outstanding facts about the new plus-powered Kelvinator.

For they mean better cooling and faster freezing... many years more of service... greater money savings, day after day, year after year.

Yet Kelvinator costs no more. And it's easy to buy. See how small the weekly payments are, giving you years to pay. Why not let Kelvinator start saving money for you at once? Come in and see it today.

The best hand I ever saw at tactfulness was my Uncle Squincey. He use'ta be a sort of junk dealer down home. One day he went up to the house of a new family and rang the doorbell. The lady opened the door a little bit and stood there glarin' at him, and says, "What do you want?"

Uncle Squincey says, "Have ya got any old beer bottles?" The lady opened the door and stood there glarin' at him ans said, "Do I look like the kind of a lady who would have beer bottles?"

Uncle Squincey says, "Well, I'm sorry, sister; I didn't see you very well, but now I can see I was wrong and I apologize." Then he studied her face for a while and he says, "Have ya got any old vinegar bottles?"

War!

The Morman cricket, technically a wingless longhorned grasshopper that makes a chirping sound and arouses loud exclamations from far Western farmers, now becomes a $300,000 project for the Government. The Government, traditionally keeping its powder dry against invasions, has anticipated the cricket this year and will sally forth with dust guns loaded with sodium arsenite.

First, meet the cricket: Back in 1848 when the insect found renown as an agricultural pest, sea gulls pounced on them in Utah to relieve somewhat the situation. Now a monument in the Temple grounds at Salt Lake City helps to commemorate the incident. From the incident comes the cricket's first name; it gained the other part from the fact that it looks something like the common black field cricket. It preys on cereal crops, alfalfa, garden crops and fruit. It accounts for the contribution of some lush words for the mother tongue.

So, armed with their dust guns, loaded with sodium arsenite, and some $300,000 of WPA funds, the army against the Mormon cricket invasion will stand their ground and hold their fire until they see the gleam of the crickets' eyes. A good target will be offered. The crickets offer a solid front formation. They travel in bands, varying in size from a city block to a square mile or even more, with from 40 to 50 crickets to the square foot. The worst shot could hit a city block with a dust gun.

The sight of battle will be stirring, should anyone want to go out to see the engagement after the manner of the Congressmen going out to witness the Battle of Bull Run. A migrating horde gives the ground the appearance of moving. Unless disturbed, they travel straight ahead like Napoleon's Old Guard, looking neither to the right nor the left. They won't go around an obstacle, but rather hurdle it with amazing agility that should lend a touch of the acrobatics to the battle scene. In the "stripped and deadly arena" the WPA recruits will stand unflinching, like stone walls, and at a word from the generalissimo, Frank Cowan, of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, will fire with the signal precision of Gridley.

On the battle ground each State will have a campaign leader. The gathered Northwest will be in line like "an ax of war"—Utah standing beside Nevada and Colorado, Oregon, Washington and Wyoming. The generalissimo will direct the firing from his desk in Helena, Mont. At the word, the guns of the hired WPA recruits will bellow and the embattled farmers by the rude bridges of the countryside will cut loose.

Properly dusted, the crickets eat of the poison and also breathe it. The crickets die and the battle goes to the Nation that keeps its powder dry. And after a while there will be no more crickets, and probably little recollection of them except when one is pondering the monument to the gulls or is reflecting on some of the lush words the crickets were responsible for bringing into the already ripe Mother Tongue.

Wife of Dietz Arraigned as FurSmuggler

Seized When Gambling Raids Were Made by Police.

Clad in mink coat, Mrs. Selma Plisco, wife of William Plisco, alias William Dietz, was arraigned before ham Turnage yesterday on a charge United States Commissioner Needof conspiracy to violate custom laws.

She was arrested Monday when police entered her home at 1732 Hobart street northwest. Simultaneously police raiding squads broke in nine alleged gambling places and seized 13 men.

Mrs. Plisco pleaded not guilty to the charge which accuses her of having smuggled into this country a $5,000 silver fox coat without having paid duty. The raiders found the coat but did not confiscate it.

Commissioner Turnage continued the case for a hearing April 15 and set bond at $2,500.

Gaming charges were lodged against the 13 men. All the cases were continued for two weeks. The defendants pleaded not guilty.

Their names and bonds were: Bernard Corridon, $4,000; Donald King, $2,000; Tony Di Genaro, $3,000; Percy May, $3,000; Phillip Samakow, $3,000; Edward Kelly, $2,000; Ella Kelly, $2,000; Cecil Hays, $2,000; Neal Blake, $2,000; Eugene Garges, $2,000; George E. Dohoney, $2,000; Charles Bird, $2,000; Raymond Reeve, $2,000.

Monday's raids brought the total this month to 39 with more than 50 men arrested.

Dog's Death Causes Rush for Licenses By Lift Operators

The death of a dog in a plunge down an elevator shaft at 1740 Euclid street northwest, Sunday, provoked a rush of elevator operators on the District Building yesterday. More than 250 operators formed a queue along a corridor as they waited in line to get licenses to run elevators.

Their action was prompted by a case in police court in which James Reynolds, colored, was fined $5 for operating a lift at the Euclid street address without a license. Reynolds was brought to court after a dog owned by Mrs. Grace Conant fell down the shaft. Reynolds had stopped the elevator and opened its door. The bottom of the lift was about a foot above the floor level and the dog darted into the opening and fell three stories.

Speculating on the matter, Col. John W. Oehmann, District building inspector, hazarded a guess that between 1,500 and 2,500 persons operate elevators in the city. He said he could not estimate how many of these were licensed, as permits expire as soon as operators change from one elevator to another.

Standard Boosts Pay in This Area

W. H. Evans, manager of the Delaware-Maryland-D. C. division of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, announced yesterday an increase, effective tomorrow, for clerical and other salaries employes. Some 900 employes will benefit. The raises were coincidental with the series of pay increases negotiated with thousands of wage earners in joint conference with the management.

In the last few days, sales employe representatives presented a case for further increases and received consideration in line with the company's policy of maintaining wages at least as high as those paid by other employers in the locality for similar work.

Evans explained that all office and other salaries employes not participating in this advance, who are receiving $1,800 or less per year, will get a flat monthly increase of $15 each. Those employes receiving salaries from $1,800 per year up to executive levels will be considered individually by departments.

Walt Kuhn's Quaint Philosophy Allows for Varied Art Tastes

American Artist Thinks Any View Is as Good as the Other Fellow's; Doesn't Like Cubism, Dadaism or Surrealism.

Take it from Walt Kuhn, prominent American artist, the next time one of those surrealism or what-have-you fans looks down his nose at you for your bourgeois lack of appreciation, put in a call for Psychopathic Hospital and a strait-jacket.

"Don't go into synthetic raptures over a painting," he said. "Why follow the herd's craze of the hour? If you can't get a kick out of something, don't try. After all, your tastes are as good as the next fellow's."

Kuhn, who has opened a one-man exhibition at Studio House and who has an unartistic horror of publicity, hit a new high in unorthodox art palaver here yesterday.

"I have dabbled in Cubism, Dadaism, Surrealmism and what have you," he commented. "The thrill lasted for a while . . . passed . . . then I discovered there was nothing to it."

As for the artists who resort to propaganda, they defeat their own purpose, Kuhn said. "Art is like a snake and will strike back," he warned. "Daubers in oil should not butt into the field of the cartoonist."

Paint a universal picture; get everything into it, he counseled. You may have something, you may not have, but what's the difference?

The New York painter, who hews to ancient standards (or hopes he does), said American art has "a long way to go yet." "It has not reached the proper respect for classic art," he added.

Can an artist be good without struggle? Well, Kuhn said he did not know, but he was willing to answer with a parable.

In a certain island in the South Seas where life is rosy and the class struggle is a bad dream, the young buck of the species cannot call himself a man until he submits to the torture of a complete tattoo of his epidermis. "And when I say complete, I mean complete," Kuhn interjected.

The young man of course can give the raspberries to custom, flout the tribe, hitch his knapsack and take a walk. But from then on he is ostracized, and he leads a lonelier life than Timon of Athens.

Kuhn, who at one time sweated over easel and board for newspapers in New York and San Francisco, has a workshop in a hotel loft, and paints only to exist. And he avoids the genus of his species as he would a skunk.

District Airport Facilities Again Meet Criticism

Ships Landing There 'Have to Be Good,' Aviation Speaker Says.

Washington's airport came in for a round of disparagement again last night at a banquet at the Willard Hotel given by the National Aeronautic Association in honor of American Airlines' millionth passenger. The millionth passenger, Theodore C. Baker, made a trip between New York and Boston the middle of last month.

Although only one reference was made to the local airport, it met with applause. Charles R. Horner, toastmaster and president of the National Aeronautic Association, was eulogizing American Airlines. "Their planes are good; their pilots are good," he stated.

"They have to be good," he added in an aside, "because they fly in and out of Washington Airport."

Included in the audience were leading figures in aviation, pilots and executives who regularly use the local air field.

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, was the principal speaker. He made a vigorous demand for integration of governmental control over aviation.

Other speakers were W. W. Howes, First Assistant Postmaster General; Fred D. Fagg, jr., director of the Bureau of Air Commerce; Norman B. Haley, director of air mail in the I. C. C.; Harllee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General, and C. R. Smith, president of American Airlines.

Belloc Declares Catholicism Necessary to Save Civilization

Author, Theologian and Lecturer Praises Work of G. K. Chesterton in Urging Religious Tolerance in England.

Breaking through his scientific detachment for a moment last night, Hilaire Belloc, historian, theologian and lecturer, warned a distinguished audience assembled in Georgetown's Holy Trinity Hall that upon an immediate return to the principles of Catholicism depends the future of civilization.

If we fail to take this path, he said, "our civilization will surely go down."

Confining himself to this one observation, Belloc devoted the remainder of his talk to a survey of the man whose unfinished work he is carrying on—the late Gilbert Keith Chesterton, convert to and protagonist of Catholicism.

Chesterton, he said, was a "phenomena". A typical Englishman, "quintessentially an Englishman," in manner, attire, heart and mind, he tried to undermine the "fundamental underlying principle of England" he fought anti-Catholicism.

The England of today, said Belloc, has adopted "patriotism as its religion." Anti-Catholicism is reflected in the country's law, historic myths, philosophy, and in its "hatred for nations such as Italy and France which have clung to the Catholic cult."

For purposes of arousing in this England a sympathy for the principles of Catholicism, Chesterton, Belloc pointed out, was singularly well-equipped. He was "filled with the moisture of life, he had the gift of epigram and a flowing love of men. He had an aptitude for joining the familiar with the unfamiliar, a tremendous literary fecundity, and befor taking Catholicism he had become firmly rooted in the popular imagination.

"People had come to realize his worth. Conversion did not make him an object of contempt. He was tolerated."

"I regret," he continued, "that I am about to die. I would like to return in about 100 years to observe the effect Chesterton will have had on his countrymen. He did not ask that they embrace Catholicism, he merely asked that they be sympathetic to it."

Catholics Elect Bishop O'Hara As Peace Head

The Most Rev. Edwin V. O'Hara, Bishop of Great Falls, Mont., and Dr. Charles G. Fenwick, professor of Bryn Mawr College, Pa., will head the Catholic Association for International Peace another year.

They were re-elected president and vice president, respectively, at the final session of the organization's eleventh annual conference yesterday at the Mayflower. Other officers elected at the same time are as follows: Vice presidents—Dr. Michael Francis Doyle, of Philadelphia; Dr. Elizabeth Morrissy, Notre Dame Convent, Baltimore; the Rev. Philip Reilly, O. P., Providence (R. I.) College; Sister Vincent Ferrer, O. P., Rosary College, River Forrest, Ill.; treasurers—Dr. Kathleen E. Murphy and Dr. Lewis Potts, Fordham University; executive secretary—Miss Elizabeth B. Sweeney.

Political organization in a world society was the subject threshed out at the fifth and final round table discussion of the conference. Charles O'Donnell, of Harvard University faculty, suggested that a world conference should be called for the purpose of framing an international constitution. "A constitutional world organization is the one way to peace," he declared, as he pointed out that such a measure should provide, among other things, a judiciary selected similarly to the World Court; a bill of rights; a representative assembly.

Emphasizing that "unless we rise above the natioal point of view, we cannot achieve international justice," Dr. Francis A. Arlinghaus, of the University of Detroit, pointed out that Catholics should promote the idea of a world citizenship to overcome the problems of nationalism. Carrying on the discussion, Rev. James A. Magner, of Quigley Seminary, Chicago, stressed that the Catholic Church could function more effectively as an instrument of peace if it established international Catholic institutes to break down the barriers of nationalism.

The student Peace Federation of the Catholic Association for Peace will hold its first annual conference at the Mayflower today, beginning at 10 o'clock.

By the Associated Press.

Vatican City, March 30.—A new constitution for the Catholic University of America in Washington, was approved today by the sacred congregation of seminaries and university studies.

Mgr. Joseph Corrigan, rector of Catholic University, said "the approval covers the sacred sciences, theology, canon law and philosophy, and all schools of arts and sciences as well as professional schools attached to the university in plans for the future."

The work of bringing the university's constitution into accord with the apostolic constitution, Deus scientarium dominus ("God, master of sciences"), was carried on by Mgr. Corrigan and Dr. Francesco Lardone on behalf of the university, with the sacred congregation.

The approbation bears the date of March 7, feast of St. Thomas Aquinas, patron of philosophy. The new university constitution is being printed.

In an audience granted Mgr. Corrigan on the anniversary of the pope's coronation February 12, the Holy Father gave approbation to the proposed school of social sciences.

The Pope, in an encyclical, "Divini Redemptoris," on Communism, said there was a need for such schools and exhorted those charged with education to establish them.

Mgr. Corrigan Honored.

Brown Plans For Training Of Detectives

Considers School After 4 Demotions Are Announced.

9 Others Are Placed on Probation; Work Is Called 'Shoddy.'

Formation of a school for detectives is being contemplated by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, as a step toward equipping plain clothes men with a knowledge of their special work.

This announcement was made yesterday as four precinct detectives and a motorcycle policemen were demoted when the Commissioners announced the findings of a board of inspectors.

Meanwhile, nine detectives were placed on probation and given an opportunity to redeem themselves after the board criticized their work.

"There is much evidence plain clothes men in many cases do not know how to be detectives," commented Maj. Brown, in connection with the contemplated school.

Detectives returned to uniform yesterday included Robert L. Jones, Henry Rinke, Nelson G. Thayer and William B. Satterwhaite. The change will lose them additional compensation of $240 yearly.

Private Foster J. Rowen, of the motorcycle squad, was dismounted and returned to foot patrol duty, with the loss of $120 yearly in pay.

The commissioners announced promotion of four privates to the rank of precinct detectives. They are Joseph B. Comiskey, motorcycle policeman; Richard J. Felber, Irving Rosenburg and Luther Wise. Comiskey has been assigned for the last month with Lieut. Floyd Truscott's gambling squad. Maj. Brown refused to release the names of the nine men placed on probation.

The demotions came as the result of a survey made by Inspectors Maurice Collins, Edward J. Kelly and William E. Holmes. Brown said the investigations showed "shoddy" work on the part of the men demoted.

Meanwhile, Private William E. Bricker, of the Traffic Division, was transferred to the White House police force. This job is regarded as a promotion, although it carries no additional pay. Police George O. Burkley, jr., was assigned to duty as a motorcycle man. All these changes will become effective tomorrow.

Easing of Flying Rules Is Proposed

Liberalization of Government aviation regulations, to allow beginners to take flying instruction without physical examination, is under consideration by the Bureau of Air Commerce, Director Fred D. Fagg, jr., told delegates to the Intercollegiate Flying Club conference at the Lafayette Hotel yesterday.

If proposed regulations are adopted, any person would be permitted to fly with a competent instructor without undergoing any examination. Before solo flying, however, students would be examined to determine flying ability and physical qualifications. Fagg added that the bureau is considering a new rating for aviation instructors to make certain that only qualified pilots give instruction.

Beauty Contest Earns Contract For Runner-Up

By the United Press.

Hollywood, March 30.—Proving it possible for a beauty-contest winner to make the film grade after all, dark-haired Gail Patrick, former second-string "panther woman," has a brand-new contract and a substantial salary boost.

Paramount plucked Patrick (born Margaret Fitzpatrick) from Birmingham, Ala., back in 1932, when the studio was running a contest to pick a "perfect panther woman," whatever that may be.

Ran Close Second.

Patrick didn't win. She placed about five lengths behind a girl called Kathleen Burke, of Hammond, Ind., out of pictures for some time now. But the studio signed her to a flimsy sort of contract and let her knock around the stock company for two years.

The trouble was she had beauty, but none of what Wally Westmore cards "selling points"—the inviting lips of Loretta Young, odd eyes of Joan Crawford, or the high Carole Lombard cheek bones.

It took Patrick three years to hit her stride as an actress, and even then she went no great guns. Sometimes her plight was so bad nobody on the lot would bet a nickel her next option would be raised.

Now in High Brackets.

Those days seem all over now, however. The lass has been given the feminine lead in an elaborate new musical, "Artists and Models," and will probably drag down about $1,000 a week.

A few contest winners stand out in retrospect. Mary Astor is one. She topped a Chicago beauty orgy, but it was much easier to crash films in silent days. Lois Wilson was another. She was a "Miss Alabama" in her time.

Dorothy Dell, who won the "Miss Universe" title at Galveston, Tex., seemed on the way until her death in an auto accident three years ago.

Please Name A Horse.

Barbara Stanwyck will run a fan contest to name a racehorse, but the only prize will be "my undying gratitude." Foal born last Thanksgiving Day and practically handraised by the actress is the candidate. It's the only nag from her new horse ranch, Stanwyck will race under her own colors. The 4-months-old colt is a filly, so he-man titles are out.

Jean Harlow acquires a "grandfather" by courtesy of the M-G-M casting office. He's none other than Lionel Barrymore, who'll go into spectacles and white hair make-up for "Saratoga."

Intent on playing Harriet Hilliard across the board, RKO has purchased "Crazy People," a story to be tailored to the gal's measure. Bluessinging blonde who turned brunette for the camera's sake will go into the thing immediately after "New Faces of 1937."

Jews of D. C. Plan Rally on Monday

A united synagogue rally in which all Jews in Washington will join forces to "overcome religious indifference" was announced yesterday for next Monday night by a newly formed committee, headed by Morris Stein.

The mass meeting in Adas Israel Synagogue, Sixth and I streets northwest, will inaugurate the committee's activities, Stein said. Dr. Israel Herbert Levinthal, of Brooklyn Jewish Center, will speak.

On the committee are L. Kalichstein, co-chairman; Mrs. A. Dietz and Mrs. J. Kaminsky, co-chairman of the women's division; Joseph Wilner, president of Adas Israel Congregation; Paul Himmelfarb, president of B'Nai Israel Congregation; Samuel Benjamin, Max M. Bernstein, Meyer Brenner, H. Felter, Nathan Hankin, A. W. Kahn, Rabbi Solomon H. Metz, Max A Ostrow, Louis Rosenberg, Rabbi Henry Segal, Mrs. Leon A Tashof, S. B. Weinstein and Max Zweig.

Citizens to Assist In Truck Routing

A resolution to co-operate with the Traffic Department in having certain streets in the northeast section designated as "truck" streets, where both trucks and passenger cars may be driven, was adopted Monday night by the Trinidad Citizens' Association in session at the Wheatley School.

Streets where the group wishes this situation to exist are New York avenue, Florida avenue, Bennings road, H street and Bladensburg road. The association, however, wants K, L and M streets to be excluded from any such ruling.

A committee was named to confer with the Stanton Park Citizens' Association relative to requesting there be no parking on Fifth street, between K and E streets northeast, because of the heavy traffic over the Trinidad-Burleith bus line.

Veterans' Homes Lose Heir's Right

The act was adopted by Congress in 1910 and established the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hampton, Va.

Under the act, when a veteran failed to dispose of any of his property by will or left no heirs or next of kin, such property passed into the possession of the Board of managers of the home, but could be reclaimed by persons coming forward as heirs within five years.

"Seventh Heaven," as Remade by 20th Century-Fox, Still Is a Poignant Romance of Courageous Youth

James Stewart and Simone Simon Now Appear in Roles Created Ten Years Ago by Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor; Seats for "Good Earth" on Sale Tomorrow; Katharine Cornell Honored at White House; Greet Academy Awards Scholarships; the Howard Boys Are Coming to Earle; Theater Notes.

THAT idyllic and infinitely pathetic love story of courageous youth perched high in the rooftops of Paris, "Seventh Heaven," has been repicturized by Twentieth Century-Fox with many obvious differences, if no very flagrant contrasts, between it and the original Fox screen version of the story that brought Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor to stardom in 1927.

BELL.

All of the mechanical perfections and technical advancement that have been made during the past ten years, of course are evident in the settings and photography of the new film. It is a superbly executed picture, conceived on a scale of imposing magnitude and acted with a sincerity that matches the integrity of its material investiture.

The simple story of the "sewer rat," working under the streets of Paris, and the abused urchin, thrown out of her tawdry bistro by a brutal sister, who found their "seventh heaven" in a garret at the exhausting top of seven flights of grueling stairs, need not be recapitulated here. It begins with the discovery on the part of Chico that he is "a very remarkable fellow" and pursues an excitingly cumulative course of melodramatic action through the agonies of the Great War.

It seemed to me yesterday afternoon at the press preview of this subject, in the private projection room of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange, that the war scenes had been handled with rare skill and tremendously impressive realism by Director Henry King.

The most palpable difference between the newly furbished story and that of a decade ago, needless to say, rests in the contrasting temperaments and methods of the principal players in the respective pictures.

James Stewart, the current Chico, is a less spiritual and much more robust type that Charlie Farrell. Similarly, Simone Simon, that enigmatic young importation who is the present Diane, ingenuous as she is, completely lacks the ethereal quality that placed the stamp of poignant and unforgettable suffering upon the performance of Janet Gaynor.

To those who did not see the earlier filmization of the story, these remarks will be totally irrelevant. They are not under any circumstances to be construed as a condemnation of any aspect of the new release. It is a magnificently made picture that has been cast throughout the roster of its long personnel with a fidelity to type that is little less than amazing.

All of this will be gone into a great deal more minutely and exhaustively when "Seventh Heaven" is formally reviewed in Saturday morning's issue of The Post.

It may not be the gayest picture in the world, but it is one that no sane theatergoer would care to miss.

With its Washington "road show" engagement opening at the National Theater on Sunday night, on a two-a-day basis with all seats reserved for all performances, it seems expedient to call attention to the fact that the box-office seat sale for this distinguished cinematographic triumph opens tomorrow morning. This is the picture that took two-years-and-something to make, cost in excess of $2,000,000 and boasts Paul Muni and Luis Rainer, the Academy award winner for the best screen acting of 1936, in its costellar roles. Line forms to the right, as usual. "The Good Earth."

Last night, as will be observed from other columns of the daily press, Katharine Cornell, "first lady of the American theater," and a distinguished company were dinner guests at the White House, following which Miss Cornell was presented with the National Achievement Award, sponsored by Chi Omega, by Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, wife of the President. This is an honor well deserved by the only representative of the drama ever to receive it.

Addresses were made by Mrs. Eleanor Robson Belmont, herself a former actress of brilliant attainments, and Alexander Woollcott, writer, actor, lecturer and radio star.

Following the White House function, Miss Cornell and her guests repaired to the Carlton Hotel for a brief respite and round of social amenities before departing at midnight for New York.

The winners of the Ben Greet scholarships, presented by the Greet Academy of Dramatic Arts to honor the memory of Sir Philip Ben Greet, the revered uncle of the academy directors, are announced as Ann Joyce, Theodore Smith, Katherine Colby and Theodore Field. These scholarships were awarded by the decision of five distinguished personages constituting the board of judges and will be honored at the next term of the academy, beginning April 5.

Willie and Eugene Howard, two of America's foremost stage comics, will headline the vaudeville bill at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater the week beginning Friday, April 9, according to announcement made yesterday by Zone Manager John J. Payette.

While the Howards need no introduction to Washington audiences, since they have played here times without number during the past quarter-century, it still may be well for the benefit of those who just came in, to recall that they have starred variously in vaudeville, the Ziegfeld "Follies," George White's "Scandals" and a great many other revues and musical comedies of the top flight. And they can sing, too.

Was glad to be at the desk when Beulah Livingston, representing Universal and "Top of the Town;" Phil Lampkin, representing himself; Norman Pyle, ballyhooing "The Good Earth," and Business Manager Skinner, of the Civic Theater, stopped by, but sorry as all get out to have been absent when Crawford and Caskey, dancers with Jan Garber's orchestra at the Earle, dropped in to say hello. Well, I suppose we can't have everything!

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Ignorance may be bliss but it is apt to be very expensive, at least at the Bridge table. Time and again I have heard two defenders console each other with the observation "Well, partner, there was nothing we could do about that hand," and I could almost see them chalking up their defeat to "luck." About half the time, I should say, the remark follows such a hand as the one shown below.

South, dealer.

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	2 N T	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	3 N T	Pass
4 ♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

North's two diamond bid is worthy of comment. The hand is much too strong for the non-committal notrump response and slightly too weak for two notrump. In such cases, experts attempt to take a middle course by bidding a suit—even a shaded one. North's bidding was perfect; South's was questionable. His two and three heart rebids were correct, but over three notrump, despite his singleton, he should have passed. He had already warned North sufficiently that he did not like notrump, and should have been none too sanguine about a ten trick contract. Admittedly, however, he had a close question to decide, and his four heart bid cannot be too severely criticized.

West opened the nine of clubs; dummy ducked, and East won with the King. East, afraid that declarer might find means of discarding losing diamonds, laid down the Ace and, when West signalled high, followed with a second round. Declarer ruffed, and led a spade to dummy's Queen, then returned a heart and put up his own Kong. West grabbed the trick, and led his remaining club. Dummy's Ace won, and now declarer, faced with the necessity of taking the rest of the tricks, finessed against the heart Jack successfully. After that he laid the hand down.

I am quite sure that neither East nor West had the slightest idea that the declarer's problem had been resolved for him. The crucial play was West's acceptance of the heart King. West should have seen that the only hope for the setting trick lay in the heart suit itself. Declarer's action in entering dummy for a trump lead up to his own hand was strong indication that his suit was far from solid and indeed from the bidding, West should have visualized just such a trump suit as declarer actually held. Had he done so and used his imagination further, he would have played the nine of hearts very promptly under declarer's King. Put yourself, dear reader, in the declarer's place and note the dilemma in which this would place you.

The heart King holding you would undoubtedly cross over to dummy for another heart lead toward your own hand. East would play the eight, and now think what a terrific guess would confront you. I venture to say that most declarers, expert or average, would guess wrong.

Coming to Capitol Screen Friday

When Twentieth Century-Fox' new production of "Seventh Heaven" opens on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater on Friday, in lieu of Jean Harlow and Robert Taylor in "Personal Property," the principal roles of Chico and Diane will be played by James Stewart and Simone Simon. These are the parts created in 1927 by Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor and the ones that brought them prominence.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, March 31.—It seems to me that public previews, which take place in this town at the rate of five a week, help to prove precisely nothing. These preshowings, as you may alredy know, are for the purpose of obtaining audience reaction, not only to pictures but to individual sequences and players. But what can a producer learn from audience reaction when 200 fans exclaim "It's great!" and 200 others declaim "It's lousy!"?

GENE RAYMOND.

I am inclined to believe that producing a motion picture is a one-man job; that is, one guiding genius must direct the picture's progress. If a producer has a faculty for recognizing a good story on paper, plus the ability to transfer that story to celluloid, he needs no public reaction to tell him whether his product is good or bad. He knows.

• • • •

Such men were born to become producers, just as others are born to be artists or composers. Making movies is Goldwyn's niche, for example, and he would probably be a punk banker or lawyer, just as bankers have proven (and how!) to be flops as picture makers.

• • • •

But (weary sigh) why do I waste words? As long as "yes men" crowd theaters to applaud when producers' and directors' names flash-on-screen, and as long as Hollywood wives have new gowns to display, previews will continue to be this towns' unique hobby.

• • • •

One day I put in a telephone call for Director Sam Wood. His secretary answered the phone. "Call me later, will you?" she pleaded, "Mr. Wood started directing the Marx brothers this morning, and I'm hiding under my desk."

• • • •

For no reason, that silly story reminds me of another, a pre-Christmas yarn which I meant to tell you, but forgot. Anita Louise rode beside the "Santa Claus" float which paraded the boulevard. All along the route, youngsters tossed mash notes into her lap. Toward the end of the march, an inebriated fellow staggered to mid-street and waved the float to a halt. "Hey, Santa!" he yelled at top voice, "Bring me that!" He pointed straight at Anita.

Gene Raymond must have yearned to be a fire chief when he was a kid. Or he may be a born hook-and-ladder man. Whether or no, a gang of us, including him, were having a calm luncheon the other noon when a fire engine sirened past the restaurant. Gene excused himself as nonchalantly as possible and hastened to the door. After peering in all directions for the fire, he returned. Came a second bell-ringing wagon, and this time Fireman Raymond dashed forward, but for the second time he returned. A he settled to soup for the third time, the chief's car streaked by. Gene could stand it no longer. He shouted good-by from a mouth corner and scooted. And Fidler, the lucky dog, stuck around and got two desserts instead of smoke in his eyes.

D. C. Symphony Closes Season This Afternoon

With Percy Grainer, distinguished Australian-American pianist and composer, as soloist, the National Symphony Orchestra will close its Washington season with a concert at 4:45 o'clock this afternoon in Constitution Hall, under the direction of Hans Kindler. Grainger will play Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasia" and Franck's "Variations Symphoniques." The program also includes the "Passacaglia and Fugue" in C minor by Bach, a "Sinfonia" by Johann Christian Bach, and Dr. Kindler's arrangement of selections from Musorgski's "Boris Godunov."

Tomorrow morning the orchestra starts on a ten-day concert tour which will take it as far South as Jacksonville, Fla.

His sword was broken when he opened the door, his hair was mussed and one epaulet was missing. Chip Roberts took one look at him and said, 'Jeez.' Emmons looked up and answered: "No, Napoleon.'" . . . Charlie MacArthur tries to convince the doubting Steve Hannagan that his Ervac machine grows hair. Hannagan tells MacArthur that he'd like to see "The Women," and Charlie arranges for first-row seats. "Wow!" Hannagan tells him, "first row. Now I believe that machine can grow hair!" . . . "Did you see her hit that high C?" her agent asks Phil Baker. "It sounded," Baker replies, as though the high C hit back."

The employes who had arrived early and forced out of the store were Estelle Bowman, a cook, and three stock boys, Chester Handler, 616 Rittenhouse street northwest; Leon Canova, 1216 Jefferson street northwest, and John Baumgardner, address undetermined.

Prince Georges Bar Declines to Elect Lebowitz

With but a third of its members present at a meeting in Upper Marlboro, Md., yesterday, the Prince Georges County Bar Association refused to accept the membership application of Louis Lebowitz, Mount Rainier attorney, who started the investigation of an alleged bonding racket resulting in indictments against seven policemen, a justice of the peace and a bondsman.

Nine of the fifteen members present voted in favor of admitting Lebowitz. Six voted against it. The by-laws require that candidates for membership must be approved by three-fourths of the members present.

Incensed over the association's refusal to accept Lebowitz's application, one member suggested to reporters after the meeting that another vote be called when a more representative membership is in attendance.

The association also went on record as opposed to President Roosevelt's proposal that the Supreme Court be enlarged.

States Attorney Alan Bowie, secretary, was directed to send copies of a resolution opposing interference with the court to Maryland's two Senators, Millard E. Tydings and George L. Radcliffe.

The association accepted into membership John Dudley Diggs, of LaPlata, Md., who is associated with Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer at Upper Marlboro, and Hammond Welsh, of Hyattsville.

Griswold to Speak.

Representative Glenn Griswold, of Indiana, will speak tonight at a banquet and dance in the Beaver Dam Country Club celebrating granting of the charter to the newly organized Lions Club of Hyattsville, Md., and vicinity.

Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, a former district governor of the Lions Club, will act as toastmaster. Among the guests of honor who have been invited are H. C. Byrd, president of the University of Maryland; Prof. J. E. Metzger, president of the Kiwanis Club, and George Cook, president of the Rotary Club.

Presentation of the charter will be made by J. T. Motz, of Baltimore, district governor of the Lions Club for the State of Maryland.

The new chapter of the Lions Club was formerly the Exchange Club. The banquet tonight will start at 6:30.

Isaac Gans, member of the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, will be the principal speaker at a meeting of the Kiwanis Club tomorrow night at 6:30 at the Beaver Dam Country Club, Landover, Md.

Card Party Scheduled.

A card party, under auspices of the various towns served by the Upper Marlboro, Md., volunteer fire department, will be held at the Marlboro High School April 10 at 8:30 p. m. Proceeds will be used for the maintenance of the fire company.

Chairman of the committees in charge of arrangements are Mrs. Earl Wyvill, prizes; Mrs. Frank Scrivener, tickets; Mrs. Wyvill, tables, chairs and cards; Mrs. Harry Buck, refreshments, and Miss Maude Gibbons, advertising.

Trend Toward Safer Driving Noted in Traffic for Week-End

By Howard F. Wentworth.

(Winner of first prize in the Nation-wide C. I. T. Safety Contest with his 1936 series appearing in The Post.)

Careful driving and increasing observance of highway safety rules brought Washington one of its safest holiday week-ends in recent months, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer reported yesterday, after an analysis of Easter traffic.

In spite of the heavy tourist influx, accident records showed "about an average week-end," Van Duzer declared.

"There was evidence of co-operation on all sides," the traffic director reported. "District drivers showed an unusual willingness to obey regulations and exercise motoring caution. Out-of-town motorists contributed to a small percentage of the total mishaps."

From Saturday to Monday—peak of the Easter rush—only 81 persons were injured in highway crashes. And only two of these suffered serious hurts. During the same period, 101 accidents were reported—the majority of them minor.

Considering the large number of autos on Washington streets, official hailed this record as an evident trend toward safe driving.

Intersection Not Protected.

And as the new safety patrol, with Policeman George M. Patton as "safety officer," entered its third week of daily highway cruises, only one traffic death has been reported as against six the first two weeks of this month.

But in other sections of the country, the motoring toll continues to mount. National Safety Council figures show the advent of mild weather brought 1,050 more deaths than the first part of 1936.

During recent tours of city streets, the safety patrol has observed numerous "danger spots" throughout the District. Officials point out that congressional appropriations are necessary to equip these hazardous spots with adequate signal devices and markers.

At Twenty-first and P streets northwest, there are neither signal lights nor "stop" signs. Traffic is heavy along P street from Dupont circle into Georgetown.

Recently, a District fireman was killed at this uncontrolled intersection when a fire engine and private car collided. Residents of the community cite repeated accidents as the principal need for safeguarding the dangerous corner.

The patrol has also observed that Park place northwest is one of the city's most hazardous "speedways." Narrow and hilly, the street curves and twists from Rock Creek Church road to Michigan avenue. Private homes—with scores of ypungsters playing on the sidewalk—line one side of the thoroughfare and a fence bordering Soldiers Home the other.

On numerous occasions, the patrol has chased speeders along this street—several times at rates exceeding 50 miles an hour. At one point, cars cross a "blind" intersection into Soldiers' Home grounds

Many times, motorists have been warned against the dangers of Bladensburg road and Queens Chapel road northeast. A District policeman was killed at this post last year. Since then, signal lights have been installed and accidents have decreased.

Vision Is Obscured.

The lights, however, are hidden from motorists coming into the city from Maryland. A rise in the roadway blocks vision until cars are almost upon the lights. The danger is heightened by a narrow underpass beneath tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania railroads.

Another danger spot the patrol has noted is Ninth and U streets norwest. Records show that numerous accidents have occurred at this spot, controlled by a policeman only during rush hours.

In Traffic Court yesterday, Policeman Patton testified against 16 lawbreakers picked up by the safety patrol since last Thursday. In each instance the accused offenders were convicted by Judge John P. McMahon, who inflicted fines ranging from $15 to $5.

In one case, a driver accused of speeding 40 miles an hour pleaded for leniency, contending he would lose his job if convicted. Judge McMahon fined the man $10, remarking:

"The man who makes his living by driving an automobile should think of his job before breaking the law. He has a responsibility to himself as well as others."

Another offender, accused of speeding and driving on the wrong side of the street, was represented by an attorney. Said the lawyer: "My client was late for work. He has a good record. I think leniency would best serve the ends of justice in this case."

Said Judge McMahon:

"Pay $10 for speeding and $5 for driving on the wrong side of the street."

Another defendant was accused of attempting to pass a standing street car while traveling at a high rate of speed. In doing this, he allegedly struck the fender of another car, at the same time cutting in front of other standing vehicles.

Drivers Lose Permits.

Driving permits were revoked or suspended against the following District motorists accused of speeding, the Board of Review and Revocations announced yesterday:

Sergeant Major Jiggs Is Dead

Jiggs is dead.

For Sergeant Major Jiggs II, U. S. M. C., since March 22, 1927, the famous mascot of the Marines, passed away quitely at Marine Barracks at Quantico, Va., Monday night, and yesterday high Naval and Marine officers made plans for a military funeral befitting his distinguished career and reputation.

The pedigreed bull dog was presented to the Marine Corps by one of its former members, Gene Tunney, shortly after Private Pagett, the previous canine mascot, had gone the way of all good Marines. Jiggs joined the ranks as private; three years ago he was promoted to the rank of sergeant major. He was one of the youngest Marines in the service, only 12 years old when he died.

The original Jiggs was the Marines' mascot from 1921, when he was purchased by Gen. Smedley Butler, until his death in 1926. Private Pagett was the next Marine mascot, the gift of British Marines. But he, too, passed away from a severe attack of eating between meals, medically known as gastritis.

And now Jiggs II is dead. Marines say they will never find another like him.

El Patio Plans To Have Plenty Of 'April Fool'

Most of Jokes Will Be at the Expense of Bandsmen.

By Chanticleer.

If April Fool's Day is a day of clowning, why not do it right, says Maestro Sande Williams at the Carlton's El Patio. And not even the members of Sande's band know exactly what the shooting will be about tonight except that they'll all be very April Foolish in clown suits and the piece de resistance musically will be a seasonal version of "Poet and Peasant."

Sande promises that the biggest part of the monkey business will have to do only with the band. But just to keep everything running along smoothly, the customers may at random times be taken for a bit of an April Fool ride. Incidentally, Pianist Jack Gardiner will be shifted to the drums for the evening.

At the Wardman, the decorations for April Fool's Day will be the thing with a balloon motif—varicolored balloons with a piece of currency attached to each. Now most of the currency you wouldn't even bother to take home to the kids but occasionally there will be a real honest-to-goodness one-buck bill, good at any bar.

Its practically old-home week at the Raleigh with every one feeling very pleased. Not only is Eddie Elkins back—but now Sally Evans has returned for another engagement. Sally is the Washington gal who brightens the cocktail hour with request numbers and again between 9 and 10 with a musical interlude. Don and Sally Jennings appear nightly on the floor.

Gerson Kaufman will be back in these precincts again, come next Friday, this time at the Madrillon. Gerson is the ambitious fellow who, not content with playing one saxophone or clarinet, plays them two at a time. He'll appear with Johnny Shaw and his band.

Speaking of musicians, you'll be interested in knowing that the 6 feet of blondness that has jined up with Sascha Bartnovsky and his orchestra at the Russian Troika is Ralph Fox. He formerly drummed with Freddie Clarke at R-K-O. And, speaking of Sascha, he pleased the Greek Legation's party no end the other evening by singing several numbers in the Greek grand manner.

Milt Barrett has decided the barn dance specials have had their cycle and now is featuring "round-dancin' chords" at the Dude Ranch. That is to say, fox trots and waltzes replace the hillbilly tunes.

Featured this week at the Lotus are the "Banfields," introducing something new in a specialty act. They call it "Practice Makes Perfect." It was recently a feature in a Joe Cook stage show. Emile Parrd, in songs and dances that are different; Diane and Duval (held over) and the Paul Florenz D'Lovables are other features of the floor show you'll not want to miss.

The Shoreham advises it has a sensational plan of entertainment up its sleeve. If plans now contemplated go through, the Shoreham will transform the dignified ballroom entirely for something big and studendous and colossal in the way of entertainment. All we know is—hold everything for the middle of the month. On hand this week are Kirk and Lawrence, in cowboy nonsense, and Enters and Borgia, whose dancing already is well established here.

A big show is on the boards at Cocoanut Grove, under the title of Cherry Blossom Revue, with the central figure a very cute little Japanese dancer. And she sings, too, very acceptably—mostly American tunes in Japanese. Also Helen Elly, just in town from Miami's Hollywood Club, and Raoul and Virginee, dancers. Ah, yes, the bouncers, too. The Grove, you know, has pulchritudinous bouncers. That's right. Real lady bouncers.

Presence of the Hawaiians and Helen Malcolm at the Ambassador's Hi-Hat is very definitely a part of the atmosphere of this cocktailery—and, according to the Ambassador's bosses, is recognition of the fact that comfort and restfulness play a huge part in the success of a cocktail lounge. The theory is that soft music and sweet is what is wanted rather than blaring, raucous music. Come to the Hi-Hat and relax, is the Ambassador's No. 1 invitation.

They Lead the Bands at the Town's Supper Spots

On the Air Today

At Mark Warnow's party last Saturday night I had a long talk with Col. Jack Major, master of ceremonies of the Columbia Monday afternoon variety show. Major doesn't like to be referred to as a commentator so he has created a mythical country cousin to whom he writes letters and from whom he frequently receives word on "conditions" in Washington.

This particular effort of the Kentucky humorist appealed to me and I had the colonel send me a copy as follows:

"Dear Colonel: I see by the papers that Roosevelt is courting trouble and has turned Washington into a regular baseball game. Roosevelt is the pitcher and he's got nine men to retire before the Democrats can come to bat again. Those that have a batting average of over 70 make him nervous and its pretty hard for him to fan any of them. Looks like the more he fans them, the hotter they get.

"A fellow by the name of Hughes is the unpire at home plate, while another fellow named Lewis calls the strikes. He is usually sitting down.

"The first inning, which began in 1933, the Democrats got the bases loaded. NRA got to third base—AAA got to second—and Guffy was caught coal at home place, and called out by Hughes.

"My suggestion is: the next time the Democrats get the bases loaded, put Garner in as pinch hitter and let him knock one of those long Texas leaguers. He's sure to knock a home run. Your cousin, George Bingham."

Major is a native of Kentucky (or Tennesses, as he says, because he was born on a speeding train). He owned his first pair of shoes at the age of 14 when his family moved into Paducah. Then he met Irvin S. Cobb (he caddied for him) and from this acquaintance began Major's career as humorist, actor, singer and radio performer.

Another feature attraction of the evening will be the debut of Ken Murray and his troupers in the period held for so long by Burns and Allen, WJSV, Wednesdays at 8:30. Oswald will be there, with Shirley Ross vocalizing with Lud Gluskin's Band, and Marlyn Stuart.

Murray has been publicized considerably in the last year so it might be a good idea to mention that Maestro Gluskin, noted for his suave continental music is really the son of a Brooklyn dentist. Lud was supposed to have been a dentist, too, but he soon found he could get more fun in banging a drum than drilling teeth. He graduated from Yale, served overseas in the air corps, was a business man in Japan, worked as a watch salesman but finally joined an orchestra making a European tour. That resulted in his forming an orchestra of his own.

Gluskin now is director of music for the Columbia network on the West Coast. He has played command performances before the King and Queen of England, Queen Marie of Roumania and for other royalty including Alfonso of Spain.

Pipe Pricing Plan Declared Illegal

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Trade Commission declared illegal has the "basing point" system of standardizing Nation-wide prices used in several major industries.

The commission issued a complaint against 35 companies producing 90 per cent of the Nation's cast iron soil pipe, and the Cast Iron Soil Pipe Association, of Birmingham, Ala., charging that the industry's "Birmingham plus" system of prices violated the anti-trust law and the Robinson-Patman anti-price discrimination act.

The steel, cement, sugar and some other industries have used the system. The commission said the system works so that regardless of where the pipe actually is manufactured, the "delivered prices are equivalent to a base price fixed at Birmingham, Ala., plus the freight rate from Birmingham to the buyer's freight station, wherever located."

Loiterers Barred Near Duke's Home

St. Wolfang, Austria, March 30 (AP).—The Duke of Windsor, seeking the role of a "forgotten man," settled a domestic conflict in his new home today by banishing a Tyrolean cat for an assault on his new cairn terrier pup, Cchnooki.

That was one of his first acts as he settled down in Appesbach Villa for a month's stay, and having quieted that situation, he took steps to assure himself greater privacy.

He sent an aide to a nearby village to learn how many visitors were there. Then he instructed police to clear loiterers from the road passing the villa.

Spy Plot Linked To 2 Japanese

Los Angeles, March 30 (AP).—Police disclosed today that after arresting two Japanese following a knife fight they broke into a locked chamber of an Alameda street rooming house and found a radio set, maps of Hawaiian fortifications and plans of the Los Angeles water system.

One of the Japanese, badly wounded in the stomach, was taken to the county hospital. Officers said he was in such a condition that he was unable to talk, beyond saying his name is T. Onishi.

The other Japanese identified himself as Buichiri Abo.

"We are convinced that Abo is connected with a foreign spy organization and was in the business of accumulating and disposing of military information," said Detective Capt. Bert Wallis.

Massachusetts Senate Rejects Child Labor Act

Boston, March 30 (AP).—The Massachusetts Senate today, by a roll call vote of 30 to 6, rejected ratification of the Federal amendment which would limit, regulate and prohibit labor of children under 18. The House last week voted 188 to 13 against ratification.

Peiping, China, March 31 (Wednesday) (AP).—Frederick B. Snite, jr., youthful Chicago infantile paralysis victim, today entered his second year in an "iron lung," cheered by news he is soon going to start the 10,000-mile trip home.

The 26-year-old victim's father announced plans to take his son, still imprisoned in theartificial respirator, back to Chicago for treatment, sailing from Shanghai June 2.

Paderewski Honors Dead Polish Composer

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Another Young Man, Who Likens His Experience to That of 'Icarus,' Asks Advice on Problem.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I was extremely interested in the letter signed "Icarus" which appeared in your column March 27. What is this thing called "life" that it should play such tricks on people? Almost every person one meets has gone through something of the kind, and I can't quite see the point. One year ago I met the finest, sweetest, cleanest girl in the world. In a short while we were engaged to be married. I lived quite a distance in the country but worked in town and went to school in town at night. I would either drive in the nights I wasn't at school or else see her after school.

We saw each other every night and all day Sunday, beginning with early morning church service, as we were members of the same faith. And then one night, without any warning whatsoever, she said it was the last night we would be together. She had met my family, as it was our custom to have Sunday dinner with either her family or mine. All my friends had met her and everyone I knew liked her. We had big plans. Then we broke up.

• • • •

It wasn't until a couple of days had gone by that I realized just how much I missed her. Then I found myself thinking more and more about her, wondering just why fate had to play such a trick on me. So I, like "Icarus," took up drinking. As he said, it helped for a time, but after a while, just as he, I found myself getting morbid in my cups until there was no living with myself. I soon realized I was headed for destruction if I kept it up, as my older brothers made a mess of life. Two of them died horrible deaths, mostly because of what they had made of their lives. It fell to me to try to be everything they had not been.

• • • •

So I snapped out of it. By good fortune I had a creative interest in things mechanical and would take my car and the family car apart and put in new parts, overhaul the motors, etc., until I knew automobiles backward and forward. That isn't exactly getting back to Mother Nature, as you recommended to "Icarus," but I think it was a pretty good substitute. Thus, by staying home every night except Saturday, when I came to town and had a couple of drinks with my best friend—a man—I not only did myself good but got entirely back on my feet again. So I say that your advice to "Icarus" is best, if he has the means of carrying it out.

• • • •

Recently I have had another reverse, however. I had been going with another girl for several months and while I may not have been really in love, still she had become very important to me. More, I think, than anyone ever had been before. Then we, too, broke up, and although she will see me once a week, our relationship can never be the same.

• • • •

Here's my question: How can I bet back to Mother Nature or anything similar to it? I live in town now and have no way of working on my car, although I would rather do that than anything else I know of, outside of seeing the "ex." So I have taken up drinking again, and it seems to have helped to date, although it has been only a matter of days since we broke up. But it won't last. I know that as well as I know anything. What to do?

• • • •

Find other interests, you say. What? I work nights sometimes to try to stop thinking, but that doesn't work out so well. I find myself, regardless of what kind of work I am doing, thinking about her. So, in my opinion as well as yours, manual labor is the cure. But where to find it? Please suggest something. Thank you. F. T. P.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR F. T. P.: It seems to me the thing for you to do is to find a job that has to do with the taking apart and putting together of motor cars. Perhaps you can find such work in the town where you live, or, better yet, maybe you can find it in one of the great manufacturing centers where automobiles are made. A change of environment is always a great help in healing a romantic hurt; for in new surroundings, amid new faces, one is not confronted with daily routine reminders of the person one loved and lost.

• • • •

You haven't said what your present work is, nor what profession or trade your night schooling is aimed at, so naturally I don't know just how feasible such a suggestion is. But since you have such an absorbing interest in things mechanical, it seems to me it might be wise and profitable to build your workaday life around it. Therein may lie your whole salvation, professional and emotional.

• • • •

If you feel you must continue in your current job, and night school doesn't occupy all your evenings, why not make motor overhauling a sort of avocation, and get a part-time late afternoon or evening job with some garage? You might offer your services for nothing as a start, until you have proven your technical knowledge and efficiency, as well as the authenticity of your interest in the trade. Or you might swap your services for motor parts and try building a motor of your own design, and around that motor build a car of your own, designed to prove some theories you may have concerning mechanical endurance, speed, or what-have you.

M. H.

Child's Injury Needs Prompt Care of Doctor

Hurts Sometimes Are More Serious Than They Appear.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

ERNEST was struck by an automobile and knocked down and dragged. Apparently unhurt, he was allowed to go home and next day went to school as usual. When, some weeks later, he developed serious nervous symptoms and was taken to the doctor, it was found that he had suffered a severe nervous shock and had also had a slight concussion of the brain at the time of the accident.

Billy fell from the second-story window. No bones were broken, and except for a slight drowsiness for a few hours after his fall, he showed no effects of the accident. He had, however, had concussion of the brain, and only the fact that by the doctor's orders he was kept in bed for some days prevented a nervous and physical breakdown.

That a child seems to have escaped unharmed from a serious accident is no proof that he has. For safety's sake a doctor should be called, and the child put to bed and kept there. Nervous shock does not show itself at once.

For a time excitement stimulates the child and keeps him up. It is when the immediate stimulation wears off that trouble is apt to show itself, and often its onset is so gradual as to be imperceptible. The results may be so long delayed that the original cause is forgotten.

What the results will be and how the shock will show itself depends on the individual. One can only watch and wait and follow the doctor's direction. Often the enforced rest will in itself counteract the shock and prevent later developments.

No child should be permitted to attend school or undergo any kind of strain for at least four of five days or even a week after a major accident, even if at the moment he seems and feels perfectly well.

Cold Towel Aids Face.

After applying powder foundation and powder, Madge Evans, movie actress, slaps her face vigorously with a cold towel. This sets the powder and keeps the make-up from rubbing off or smudging for many hours. Even tears will not affect it.

Scroll Initials Feminize Handbags

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

VICTORIAN monograms are latest fashion note in the present trend toward femininity. Charmingly quaint is the new delicately designed monogram shown above. The initials are of 24-carat gold and silver finish interlock, but are individually distinct. Besides the monograms created to personalize handbags, there are pins and bracelets of scroll designs, representing antiqued elegance in simple, modernized versions. In this season when every wardrobe flaunts at least one printed frock, a monogrammed handbag is an ideal accompaniment. Such a bag is also appropriate to carry with costumes of chiffon and sheers when they are developed in simple stylings. Shiny accessories give a print more dash than those of dull surfaces. A suggested combination would be shoes and bag of patent leather; gloves of glace kid and hat of shiny straw. This is a season when style authorities advise dressing up the accents and dressing down the frock. Accessories were never so important in attaining chic as they are this spring.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Some diseases have a curious habit of incidence. Such a highly contagious infection as measles, which occurs almost exclusively in children, is naturally more prevalent in the winter. That isn't hard to understand. It is transmitted from one person to another by contact, and children's contacts in kindergarten and school, as well as at home, are more frequent, wholesale and intimate in the winter.

You would think the same thing would hold true of whooping cough. But, curiously, it is a disease of spring. The incidence of whooping cough is at a minimum in October and November, gradually rises until it is at its peak in April. Perhaps this is because it usually affects children at an earlier time than the school age.

Common Every Year.

Whooping cough is epidemic in large cities every year, and is apt to be on a large scale every two to four years.

It is too apt to be regarded in a light way. It is a dangerous illness. It is a public health problem of the first degree. There were 300,000 cases and about 6,000 deaths in 1932.

The cause of whooping cough is now agreed to be a minute germ, first described by Bordet and Gengou. It can be readily grown on a culture medium of potato juice and blood. This spread out on the bottom of a shallow glass dish like a layer of butter on bread is the instrument used to make an early diagnosis.

Discloses Germ.

It is called the plate culture method. In the presence of an epidemic in a house where there are several children, if one has what appears to be a cold and the parents want to be sure whether it is whooping cough or not, they obtain some of the medium plates, take the cover off, let the suspected child cough on the medium, put the cover back on and the plate in an incubator. The medium is bright red, and if whooping cough germs begin to grow on it, they form colonies of white.

This establishes the diagnosis before it can be told in any other way, and, if positive, the child is quarantined and the chance of spread diminished. It is only in the early stage that the disease is very contagious. When the patient was just coughing and snuffling, when it looked like a common cold, before the characteristic paroxysms of whooping had appeared, the plate culture showed growing germs in 80 per cent of the cases. In the paroxysmal stage, 64 per cent were positive. And in the last stage, when everybody knew the patient had the disease, and avoided him like the plague, he was not putting out any germs at all.

By Rebekah Blake.

CANDY took a back seat during Lent. Now, after many weeks of fasting, Washingtonians and their Maryland and Virginia neighbors have started a new round of entertaining. These parties include the serving of interesting refreshments and candy should be among them.

The old custom of making home-made candy has been revived. There were recipes for all types of sweets from simple chocolate fudge to more complicated fruit rolls submitted in The Post Candy Contest last week.

Other Prizes Awarded.

The second prize, $2, went to Miss Edith L. Cushen, 1519 Virginia avenue, Hagerstown, Md., for her recipe for walnut brittle; the third prize, $1, went to Mrs. J. L. O'Connell, 1301 Massachusetts avenue northwest, for her recipe for maple puffs, and the fourth prize, also $1, was awarded to Mrs. G. C. Roser, of Frederick, Md., for her recipe for milk chocolate. The fifth prize, $1, was won by Miss Dorothy Rowe, 120 C street northeast, for her recipe for gum drops.

Here is Mrs. Campbell's recipe:

Marzipan Candies.

1 cup almond paste
1 egg white, beaten stiff
¼ teaspoon cream tartar
½ teaspoon orange flavor
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Few grains salt
Confectioner's sugar to mold

Prepared almond paste may be bought, or made by pounding dry almonds to a paste, leaving no unbeaten particles.

Blend ingredients and roll out small quantities with a drop of coloring for each wild rose. Color marzipan light pink, cut round pieces the size of a half-dollar, cut fine petals nearly to center, curl petals upward round the edges, bending them slightly toward the center, where a dot of yellow is placed. Daises and other flowers and many fruits can be made coloring each suitably. Vegetables, too, as peas in pod, with a bit of yellow in the green.

If desired to glaze or varnish the candy brush over the following mixtures:

1½ gills water
1½ ounces granulated sugar
½ ounce spirits of wine.

Walnut Brittle.

½ cup cold water
1 cup granulated sugar
1 teaspoon vinegar.

Boil these ingredients together five minutes. Add 2 tablespoons syrup, butter the size of a walnut and ½ teaspoon salt.

Continue cooking until a little of the mixture will harden when dropped in cold water. Then add ½ cup walnut kernels. Remove from fire and pour into well buttered tin. Set in a cool place until hardened. Break in small pieces when cold.

Mrs. O'Connell's recipe follows:

Maple Puffs.

1 pound maple sugar
1 cup brown sugar
1 cup water
1 cup chopped walnuts
12 marshmallows
Whites of two eggs
½ cup candied cherries cut fine
½ cup candied pineapple

Put the sugar in saucepan, add water and boil without stirring to firm ball stage. Cut marshmallows into small pieces, take saucepan from fire, add marshmallows, cover and let stand for five minutes.

Stir sirup to mix well and pour slowly over the stiffly beaten whites of the two eggs, beating continually.

Dignified and Impersonal Manner Should Be Cultivated.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE GREAT ARMY of business and professional women in and out of the United States Government service in Washington makes the subject of office etiquette for women an important one.

The successful business woman whether she be a clerk or an executive maintains a dignified pleasant manner in her dealings with those in the office and the outside world that comes in through the office doors.

The ideal business woman is impersonal and should focus her mind on her work, not on herself or other people's reactions to her.

A business man who recently listed his objections to women employes asserted that they usually are unable to leave their personal feelings at home. He did, however, say that some of the best workers he has in his office were women who had managed to acquire an impersonal attitude towards their work. He regarded as particularly detrimental to woman's success in business their tendency to bring their personal likes and dislikes into their office activities.

The perfect secretary is one who does her work quietly and efficiently, who arrives on time in the morning and leaves with a pleasant word when her work is done.

"Chatter" Disliked.

Many employes particularly dislike a secretary who "chatters" and who expresses her personal opinion on their business. They also strongly object to the secretary who spends much valuable time talking with the other employes at their desks, or when she meets them in the hallways.

Office manners are as carefully based on the rules of good form as are drawing room manners. Courtesy and pleasantness, dignity and lack of intrusion on another person's rights and time are real essentials of good office manners.

QUERY—I work in an office and although I am very pretty and well dressed none of the men have invited me to dinner or to the movies with them. I tell them how much I like to go out and to dance and about the places other men take me. Some of the men are unmarried and I know they take girls out some times because I see them with them. Do you think it would be polite for me to ask some of the men to invite me places? Do you think it is impolite for them not to invite me? I call them by their first names and I am real friendly but they usually call me "Miss." Do you think they do not like me? Would you try to get another position where the young men will be mroe sociable?

A Question of Form.

ANSWER—It would be very bad form to ask these men to invite you to go out with them. The office is not a social center, therefore it is not rude of them not to invite you. The polite young man who wishes to invite a young woman in the office with him to go to dinner or the motion picture or some such place with him, asks permission to call first. If the young lady lives alone or has no place to receive men callers, custom has made it acceptable to dispense with this preliminary call. It is a mistake to confuse office life with social life.

QUERY—My employer asked me to spend a week-end at his country home in order that we could finish some work. He paid me for the extra time. We worked all day but I was invited to take part in the social life of my employer and his wife and his son and daughter in the evening. They called me by my first name because I am very young. When my employer meets me in the office he calls me "Miss" and is not a bit more friendly than he was before I was a guest in his house. I wrote a little note of thanks for a pleasant week-end to his wife and asked him to deliver it to her and he told me to mail it. Do you think he is rude?"

Recipes for Use Of Maple Sirup May Win Prize

THE EARLY SPRING is the time to begin thinking about maple sugar and maple sirup. Maple sap is already beginning to run in New England, getting ready for the large demand for that product.

The Post recipe contest for this week is featuring maple. If you have a recipe of any type or description that you consider worthy of a cash prize, type or write it neatly and send it to Rebekah Blake. The Post food editor. The awards for this contest are $3 for first prize, $2 for second prize and $1 for each of the three additional prizes.

Be sure you send your recipe in time for Miss Blake to receive it not later than Saturday noon. Copy your name and address clearly on your recipe. One recipe only will be accepted from each contestant.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, March 30.

THE LISTS of "bests" among women arrive smartly here each year, right on the dot with the shy crocus. I have received the assortment of eight best-dressed women for the year—picked by designers under the auspices of Emil Hartman, who runs a large and prosperous Fashion Academy in town. These things mean practically nothing, and yet they do have a certain interest.

ALICE HUGHES.

I don't quarrel, notably, with these things. Sweet are the uses of publicity, both for the nominator and the nominees. But I am a little sore at this Hartman list because it puts Reporter Dot Kilgallen under "adventure" and not "newspaper business," which I take as a smack at my funny way of scratching a living. Hartman probably thinks that all newspaperwomen still are the traditional frumps of the world. Think again, Emil, old boy, old boy! Some of the girls these days needn't be afraid to face Mrs. Harrison Williams!

However, Hartman stresses this spring what he calls "editing the wardrobe," by which he means taking great pains with the accessories. He also opines that variety and simplicity are the twin keynotes of true smartness now. All right, Emil—all right! But if it's just the same to you, no more back-handers at newspaper girls. Call a shovel a shovel, I say, old-timer.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Well, March capered out like the usual frisky lambkin, baaing softly as it went into minor history. Don't kick that plug hat tomorrow, or call a number and ask for Mr. Lyon!

I met the handsome Senora Francisca de Benavides, first lady of Peru, not long ago—tall, blonde and social-minded. She's here to look over our hospitals, settlement houses and such. But what did the good Senora do first, as soon as she hit town? Rush off to a social center for under-privileged gamins? Nope; she did precisely what you and I would do—hurried to a hairdresser and then did a spot of shopping along the avenue!

Lawrence Tibbett, our barytone wonder-man, will make his bow to London audiences during the coronation didoes. This is fair warning to susceptable Lunnon girls. This uplifting column, by the way, very nearly crashed the famed "London Tattler" recently, but Winchell beat me by a "renovating" or "blessed event," or something. Anyhow, I'm afraid England would view me with alarm. I was far happier in being welcomed into the family of the Syracuse Journal, anyway!

There's drama in the Broadway theater that is written by fate instead of George Kaufman! A few years ago a pretty little chorus girl kicked up in "The Little Show" on the stage of our good-luck theater, the Music Box, on Forty-fifth street. Her name was Constance Cummings. Today she returns to the very same theater—as the star of "Young Mme. Conti," a London hit which has been adapted by her playwright-helpmate, Benn W. Levy! Is that drama? Why sure!

And Phyllis Brooks, the rangy blonde, who just left the Music Box stage after a run in "Stage Door," is said to be toting a large flaming torch for our No. 1 squire of dames, Prince Serge Obolensky, who thinks up old Slav feasts for our white Russians to celebrate!

Tip for visiting night club lovers. There's a brand new one on Fifty-second street, which harbors 25 of them in one block. It's called "Chez Burlesque," is decorated cutely, and features that weird, depressing monkey-business called the "strip-tease," so widely publicized by Miss Gypsy Rose Lee, now of the "Follies." Perhaps its novelty will put it over for a while. It is run by young Allen Gilbert, the only good producer in the horrid burlesque business.

Flowers Now Feature Evening Headdress

Paris, (U.P.).—Evening headdresses are not so ornate and befeathered as those shown last year. Flowers are still piled high on top of the head in coronet headdresses. These may be of artificial or real flowers or of tiny stiff flowers made up of small, colored sea shells.

Again, some of the headdresses are inspired by South Sea Island styles with brightly colored flowers piled on top of high raffia coronets. Jeweled coronets are being worn again and promise to be particularly popular in England because of the coronation.

Tulle Trims on Gowns.

Paris (U.P.).—Tulle and lace are used effectively as trimming for evening gowns in the new Heim collection. Bands of lace are inserted or are used as ruffles to trim heavier materials while pleated ruchings of tulle or cut-out flowers of tulle are used on prints and silks.

Budget for Better Living

Quarrels over the bills make Jim's family wretched. Jack's family budgets. You'd think, seeing their charming home, smart clothes, new car, that Jack earned much more than Jim.

Of course a budget doesn't give you more money to spend. It helps you get the most for what you have.

The first step in budgeting is to call a family council and decide what you want most. An expensive house like the Joneses? Nice! But wait, that would take 30 per cent of your income, leave nothing for the long trips you like to take in the car. You decide you'll live in a house that eats up only 20 per cent—and fix it up as attractively as clever headwork and handiwork will make it.

Next split your income into six divisions—shelter, food, operating expenses, clothing, advancement, savings. Make your allotment for advancement large enough to take care of your beloved motor trips. Whip your other expenditure into line.

Send 15c for our booklet, HOW TO BUDGET YOUR INCOME, to The Washington Post. Home Institute, 109 West 19th Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and name of booklet.

Mrs. Duncan had as her guests Mrs. Julia Woodson Edman, of St. Joseph, Mo., and Mrs. Thomas J. Strickler, of Kansas City, concert and opera singer, who is to present the program today at the luncheon of the Seventy-third Club, of which Mrs. Duncan is president. Mrs. Strickler remained to rehearse with the musicians, Louis Goosman, who will accompany her at the piano, and Clayton Lindsay, who will play a flute obbligato for her today.

Miss Dorothy Smith, niece of Mrs. Albert E. Carter, of California, was one of the guests. Mrs. Wadden had with her Mrs. J. A. Broderick, Mrs. H. J. Klossner and, from Philadelphia, Mrs. McCarthy Hanger and her young daughter, Miss Betty Hanger, formerly of Alexandria, fiancee of her son, Mr. Ross Pope. Noted Figures in Fields of Art and Theater Attend White House Dinner Before Presentation of Achievement Award to Miss Katharine Cornell

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt last night entertained a distinguished group of guests, including the Governor General of Canada and Lady Tweedsmuir, at a dinner in honor of Miss Katharine Cornell. The dinner was given preceding the presentation to the actress of the National Achievement Award sponsored by Chi Omega, which was made at the White House.

Miss Cornell's father, Dr. Peter C. Cornell; her husband, Mr. Guthrie McClintic, and her aunt, Miss Lydia Cornell, were among the guests, as were several women who have received the Achievement Award in other years. These were Dr. Florence Sabin, the first to whom it was given, who received it in 1931 in recognition of her work in the field of science; the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins; Miss Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Miss Frances Grimes, in the field of art. Miss Cornell is the first to receive it for theatrical success.

The presentation was made by Mrs. Eleanor Robson Belmont, who was famous some years ago as the leading lady in "Merely Mary Ann," "Salomy Jane" and other stage successes, and who has devoted herself to philanthropic and civic interests since her retirement from the theater. Mr. Alexander Woollcott also spoke at the presentation ceremonies.

Mrs. Mary Love Collins, president of Chi Omega, was among the guests, as were the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau; the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator and Mrs. Harry Hopkins; Miss Elizabeth Dyer, dean of the school of household administration of Cincinnati University; Dean Marjorie H. Nicolson, of Smith College; Mrs. Pape, lady-in-waiting to Lady Tweedsmuir, and Col. H. Willis O'Connor, aide-de-camp to the Governor General.

Many of the guests were noted artists or sculptors as well as those of the theater. Among the artists were Mr. Barry Faulkner, Mrs. James Earl Fraser, professionally known as Laura Gardin Fraser, who won the competition for the Lindbergh medal, and who was present with Mr. Fraser; Mr. Jonas Lie, who has a picture in the current exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery; Mr. Jo Mielziner, stage designer, of New York, and Mrs. Mielziner.

Mr. Otis Skinner, veteran actor, also was present, as were Mrs. George Middleton (Fola La Follette, sister of Senator Robert M. La Follette), who was formerly on the stage, and Mr. Middleton, playwright; Mr. and Mrs. Eric Gugler, Mr. A. Conger Goodyear, Mr. Stanton Griffis, Dr. Beatrice M. Hinkle, psychiatrist, of New York; Mr. Charles Moore, Mr. Henry Osthagen, Mr. Hall Roosevelt, Dr. and Mrs. George E. Vincent, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Weadock, Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, Miss Marguerite LeHand and Mrs. Malvina T. Scheider.

Mrs. George T. Pettingill to Give 'At Home' for Son and His Wife

Mrs. George T. Pettingill, wife of the Commandant of the Navy Yard, has issued invitations to an "at home" Saturday in honor of her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. George Pettingill 3d. Bates' apartment at the Kennedy-Warren.

On Friday evening Lieut. Robert Campbell, U. S. N., will entertain at a small dinner party in honor of Lieut. and Mrs. Bolton before the last meeting of the Friday Evening Supper Club. He will give the dinner on the Sequoia, the yacht of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Claude A. Swanson, of which Lieut. Campbell is commander.

The Minister of Albania, Mr. Faik Konitza, entertained at a dinner last evening for Mr. and Mrs. Drew Pearson. There were 20 guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael MacWhite Entertain at a Dinner Party

The Minister of the Irish Free State and Mrs. Michael MacWhite entertained at a dinner party in their apartment at the Shoreham last evening. Prochnik, the Chief of Staff and Mrs. Malin Craig, the Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor; the Chairman of the U. S. Tariff Commission and Mrs. Robert L. Chilean Attache, Senora de Puga Hosts at Party

The Air Attache of Chile and Senora de Puga entertained yesterday afternoon at a cocktail party from 5 to 7 in their apartment. Senora de Puga wore a black satin frock with a short jacket, and a corsage of gardenias.

The guests included members of the diplomatic, the Army and Navy sets. They were received in the drawing room and went from there to the dining room where a tea table was set, or to another room adjoining the drawing room, where cocktails were served. The tea table, which was covered with a cloth of handsome South American drawnwork, had a center bouquet of red tulips and was lighted with green candles matching the leaves of the flowers. The whole apartment had the atmosphere of sunshine and spring.

Among the guests were the new Cuban Ambassador, Senor Patterson, and the Minister Counselor of Embassy and Mme. Baron; Senora de Viteri, whose husband is here for the Peruvian-Ecuadorian boundary conference; Capt. F. C. Bradley, naval attache of the British Embassy, who came in uniform with Mrs. Bradley directly from the station where they had greeted the Governor General of Canada and Lady Tweedsmuir; Mrs. William D. Leahy, wife of the Chief of Naval Operations; Mrs. Gerald Linke, her sister, Mrs. R. B. THE MERRY WHIRL

By Marylyn.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull, is another of the Walkers of Washington. Rain or shine, he makes the distance between the Carlton, where he and Mrs. Hull live, and the State Department, on foot. Saw him striding along by Lafayette square yesterday evening. He was wearing a black Chesterfield and an Oxford-gray fedora.

Lady Tweedsmuir, wife of the Governor General of Canada, looked very smart upon her arrival yesterday at Union Station. She wore a two piece black velvet suit with a long red fox scarf, and a tiny black hat with a white flower at the front. Her lady-in-waiting, Mrs. Papes, had chosen for the occasion a long mink wrap and a close-fitting brown turban.

Miss Willa Magee, of the Canadian Legation, was also on hand to meet the distinguished guests, and she topped off her brown wool frock with a silver fox scarf.

Mrs. Victor Mallet, wife of the Counsellor of the British Embassy, was the only lady in the welcoming party who chose a fur coat for the occasion. Her wrap was of mink, exactly matching in shade her brown felt hat.

Guillermo Najera, youngest son of the Mexican Ambassador and Mme. Castillo Najera, is a firm believer in education for all. At a recent party his parents gave, he came strolling in as usual. Attired in a dark blue sailor suit, he made his way among the guests, paying not the slightest attention to anyone. His whole thought concerned the wee mite of puppyhood he carried in his chubby arms. The dog, a wire-haired terrier, was viewing his surroundings with some alarm, but was soothed by his master's voice. At that time the pup was unnamed, but if we know our little Guillermo there are probably several names by now.

Fort Myer has always been somewhat of a show place. Officials newly come to the Capital always take their families there to see the post, and visitors to Washington are eagerly piloted across the river by their hosts to see the guns, soldiers, parades and whatnot. Now the sightseers are really getting something for their money (provided they pay taxes). Yesterday afternoon, while riding about the garrison, people were treated to unusual sights. Some of them doubtless thought they had been whisked out to a frontier post, because out of some of the quarters came women and children, unmistakably garbed in the attire of the hardy souls of the wagon-trail days. We saw some of it ourselves—blonde little Mrs. Thompson B. Maury, her locks twisted into a very appropriate coiffure, and wearing a somber frock, trailing on the side, as she hurried along to the riding hall and the rehearsal for the pageant to be given the end of this week.

Speaking of this show, which is going to be the most elaborate thing put on by the Army set with the co-operation of "Washington's debutante horsewomen," when you go please notice the covered wagon act. In one of the prairie schooners there sits a grim-lipped widow, who handles the team of horses with skill. More than that, she stands out as more than a mere amateur. We were struck by this at one of the rehearsals and made haste to ask Jack Reynold about her. She is Mrs. John Meade, whose husband recently came to Fort Myer for duty (after thrilling times in Ethiopia, if we are not confusing our Army families). Before her marriage as Eudora Hunner. She did character parts and played with Walter Hampden.

Did our eyes deceive us—no—that was Alexander Woollcott chatting to none other than Lillian Gish in the Carlton Hotel yesterday afternoon. Lillian, in town for a brief visit, was a very snappy little person in her well-fitted blue suit with matching accessories.

Anita Dunlap, Dr. Simonton Married Here

Miss Anita Brunet Dunlap, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Dunlap, of Washington, was married at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning to Dr. Kinsey Macleod Simonton, son of Dr. and Mrs. Edgar L. Simonton, of Wendell, Idaho. The ceremony took place at the Church of the Epiphany, the Rev. ZeBarney Phillips officiating. The church was decorated with white tapers and Ascension lilies.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a suit of powder blue, trimmed in steel gray fox, gray accessories and a hat of the same shade. On her shoulder she wore a corsage of orchids.

Mrs. Archie P. Burgess, the matron of honor and only attendant of the bride, also wore a gray suit, with a blue hat and blue accessories.

Dr. George Hutte was best man, and the ushers were Dr. Benjamin Golden, Dr. Frank Klune, Dr. Thomas Quill, Dr. Thomas Collins, Mr. Archie P. Burgess and Mr. Cyril O'Day.

By William V. Nessly.

Severe criticism of the Administration for delay in passage of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill was contained in a statement issued last night by a conference of American Federation of Labor officials.

Both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury were mentioned in the statement, which forecast, in a short time, "the worst housing shortage this country has ever seen," with "misery" for many and the undermining of 'any return to prosperity."

The conference was called jointly by the A. F. of L. housing committee and the building trades department of the federation, which represents 19 unions with 1,000,000 members.

The statement said a "detailed campaign for promoting and hastening action on the housing bill was agreed on," and it was learned a move is on foot to bring about early hearings on the measure, irrespective of Treasury objections that have resulted to protracted conferences.

The bill calls for a $1,000,000,000 bond issue to provide funds for slum-clearance and low-rent housing projects, as well as a $50,000,000 appropriation for Federal grants, spread over the first four years of the program.

The Treasury Secretary has objected that no provision has been made in the budget for financing the plan, and he pointed out that no revenue bill was sent along with the housing measure to raise the money by taxation.

The labor statement, "protesting strongly the unnecessary delay" on the Wagner bill declared:

"There has been no definite public statement from the Administration, except occasional criticism from the Secretary of the Treasury, whose remarks, as interpreted in the newspapers, have seemed rather vague, partially misinformed and even contradictory."

Cites "Perfect Unity."

After declaring there is "perfect unity" among all those interested in improving housing condition in support of the bill now in committee, the statement asks:

"Why does not the President publicly and wholeheartedly indorse this bill?"

"The fact that there is a controversy raging over the Supreme Court and other matters," it said, "is no excuse for delaying the housing bill."

"Two families in every home" will be the slogan for 1938 and 1939, it was held, unless action is taken at once.

Blonde Is Jailed, Accused of Living With 2 Husbands

Chicago, March 30 (AP).—Mrs. Helen Watts Betenan Russell, 22-year-old blonde, was in jail today accused of living with two husbands—one by day and the other by night.

Grant C. Russell, 38, husband No. 2, charged bigamy. He said she had left his home each night, claiming she worked in a restaurant, and returned each morning.

Russell led police to a strange apartment. There was Mrs. Russell with Michael Betenan.

"Your husband wants to know what you are doing here," said a detective.

"This is my husband," the blonde said, indicating Betenan.

She said she and Russell met at a taxi dance hall and she married him "because he was pestering me."

Planning Board Opposed.

Annapolis, Md., March 30 (AP).—A series of mass meetings to protest the establishment of an Annapolis planning commission were held by residents of nearby communities. Communities involved are Eastport, West Annapolis, Homewood and Germantown.

Procession Forms.

Secretary Hull shook the governor general's hand. Others shook his hand. Then the white-haired diplomat from the bluegrass lands of Picket County, Tennessee, and the brown-haired diplomat from the moorlands of Peebleshire by the Tweed, in Scotland, adjusted their top hats and strolled gravely down the platform. At a suitable distance, in strict order of precedence, the rest followed, two by two, through the double file of sailors and marines at present arms and out before the Union Station to face a mob of people and a war-strength escort of United States Cavalry.

Here Sir Herbert Marler and Secretary Hull and the Governor General lined up at attention, their hats over their breast-pocket white-silk handkerchiefs, while the Army Band played the national anthem.

The crowd outside the station stood silent, the rush-hour street cars and the automobiles, lined up for blocks, were still; and the only sound other than the brasses of the band came in the occasional clack of a restless horse-hoof on the cobbles of the Plaza.

Photographers Busy.

This over, the photographers rushed up and worked fast; and then the group entered the row of limousines forthe parade to the White House.

On the front porch of the White House President Roosevelt stood waiting, immaculate in coal-scuttle coat, pencil-stripe pants, wing collar and Ascot tie. He was accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt, in a deep red dress. A crowd swarmed at once in around the porch and stood on the flower beds. The moving-picture men had set up their cameras in the best places, however, and scores saw nothing but the bobbing heads of photographers and the flare of flash-guns in the March twilight, as the cars drove up to deposit the diplomats under the tall white pillars of the portico.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt, after greeting Lord and Lady Tweedsmuir, gave them an informal tea. Then they all went upstairs and changed clothes for the dinner in honor of Katharine Cornell, who was presented with the 1936 National Achievement Award for Women.

The visit, described as purely social, will continue today when His Excellency and the official group will visit Fort Myer and Arlington National Cemetery, where Lord Tweedsmuir will lay a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier during the morning. Luncheon as guests of the Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull at the Sulgrave Club, and a trip on the Presidential yacht Potomac to Mount Vernon follow.

The President will meet them at the Mount Vernon dock and will accompany them to the tomb of George Washington, where the governor general will place another wreath. Tonight at the White House the guests will be entertained by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at a state dinner.

Japanese Minister Assaults Ex-Envoy

Tokyo, March 30 (AP).—An assault by one of Japan's best known diplomats on a former Ambassador at a dinner tonight caused a sensation in Tokyo official circles.

Toshio Shiratori, Minister to Sweden here on a vacation, was said to have struck Torkichi Obata, former Ambassador to Germany, on the head.

The dinner was given by Tokichi Tanaka, former Ambassador to Moscow.

Dinner guests said Shiratori was angered by something Obata said in a political discussion. It was a Japanese-style affair, guests seated on the floor, each with a heavy wooden elbow rest beside him. Shiratori seized one of these and knocked Obata senseless.

scope on the enemy planes, the 3-inch guns swing with it. The firing range, be it 1,000 feet or 20,000 feet, is computed automatically.

Bursting at the determined altitude, the projectiles fairly spray the sky, spreading fragments over an area larger than a football field. A battery of the guns fires projectiles at the astounding rate of 100 a minute.

In the Spanish civil war the insurgents have been using German anti-aircraft guns very much like those owned by the American Army, and, according to information that has come to the War Department, these guns have brought down 80 per cent of the Loyalist planes thus far put out of action.

The World War veteran, returning to the Army today, would be pleased to learn that this country's anti-aircraft guns are about as good as any developed. However, if he went into the question of numbers, he would get a shock.

U. S. Supply Limited.

He would discover that the United States is woefully lacking in the modern guns; that, whereas Berlin and other European capitals are ringed with them, this country does not have even half enough for its four anti-aircraft regiments in the Coast Artillery.

As will be pointed out tomorrow, the Army General Staff is not much worried about a hostile air invasion at this time. The generals, however, do believe in keeping the Air Corps abreast of all advances in military aviation. If an attack should come, they point out, there would be no time to build fighting planes or train officers. The same might be said about anti-aircraft guns. It would take six months to turn out such guns, and a year before they could be delivered in large quantity.

Aside from the improvement in the anti-aircraft gun, the returning World War veteran would discover that, whereas he and his fellow doughboys marched along with heavy packs on their backs, modern infantrymen travel in motor trucks; that the horses and mules that once pulled the caissons and the supply wagons are giving way to motors, and that the clumsy World War tank that traveled 4 miles an hour has been supplanted by one that speeds over the landscape at 40.

Cars Replace Cavalry.

He would learn that scout cars, armored cars and combat cars are taking the place of mounted cavalry. But he also would learn—and probably to his delight—that the Army has no intention of altogether giving up the horse. That traditional animal of war still can go places no motor vehicle can reach.

The veteran would see present-day soldiers using an automatic rifle, a weapon that would make his old Springfield of 1917-18 seem as antiquated as a flintlock. It fires as fast as the trigger is pulled, much like an automatic pistol.

Of course, the Army is not yet fully modernized in all the categories here mentioned. However, a good start has been made and the Administration and Congress seem in a mood to continue the program.

Army "Microscopic."

The late George Dern, Secretary of War, once referred to the Regular Army as "microscopic." And so it is, compared to other armies. But, as has been pointed out, the Regular Army is simply a skeleton, around which, in time of trouble, a great civilian army would be formed.

Right now, Secretary of War Harry H. Woording does not think that the first layer of flesh for that skeleton is adequate.

He is asking that the National Guard be increased to 210,000 men, still far from the 425,000 suggested by the national defense act. Last year Congress made a start by granting an increase of 3,500, the first for many years.

Woodring also is asking for additional funds so that 30,000 Reserve Corps officers can be called to active duty each year for two weeks' training. Now the number is limited to 20,000 a year.

Reserve Officers Young.

The strength of the Officers Reserve Corps today is 115,169, of which 95,619 are active. In the years immediately after the World War, the Reserve Corps was made up almost wholly of men who held commissions during the conflict. Today, however, they are in the minority. Their places have been taken by young college men turned out by the Reserve Officers Training Corps, and by some graduates of the Citizens Military Training Camps.

Woodring is asking Congress to provide for the annual training of 50,000 youths at Citizens Military Training Camps, instead of 30,000, the number trained last year.

He also is asking for an organized reserve of approximately 150,000 specialists—that is, chauffeurs, radio operators, mechanics and other skilled men who would be available for immediate duty in time of emergency. This is regarded as highly important. Unless some such plan is adopted, the Army, in the event of an emergency, will have to make a time-consuming search for such specialists among the volunteers or drafted men.

The question often is asked, "What about the CCC boys?"

Europeans, particularly those from countries where youngsters are handed wooden guns as soon as they emerge from the cradle stage, are firmly convinced that the Civilian Conservation Corps is part of a military program.

The truth is, of course, that the CCC was started as an unemployment relief measure. Its slogan is "Build forests and men." In using the youths to build up American forests, Uncle Sam also is building up the youths themselves—physically, mentally, morally.

Army Reserve Corps officers are in charge of the camps, but there is no saluting, no guns, no drilling. President Roosevelt himself warned against that.

Youths Would Join Up.

Yet there is reason to believe that, in a time of emergency, these camps would pay patriotic dividends. The number of youths who have passed through the camps now totals 1,250,000. Uncle Sam has no claim on them; no attempt is even made to keep a permanent list of their names.

However, it is probably a safe bet that most of them quickly would answer a call to the colors in a time of danger.

Vast numbers of the men who were drafted in 1917-18 were found to be physically unfit. Of 360,000 men tested at random from the general run of the draft, 25 per cent were unable to read or write simple English sentences. About half of these were foreign born, and many of them had only the vaguest idea of what the war was all about.

Considered against that background, the CCC camps seem a wholesome thing for America, looked at from any standpoint. That many of the CCC graduates expect to serve the country is indicated by the enlistments in the National Guard.

To sum up: Small as it is, tardy as it is in its modernization program, the Army is nevertheless in better shape today than ever before in our peace-time history. It is being strengthened, and that is significant. In the past, such preparedness came only when the guns started booming.

Tomorrow—The Army Air Corps.

Imperialist War Seen by Socialists

Chicago, March 30 (AP).—The newly elected national executive committee of the Socialist Party adopted a resolution in a post-convention meeting today declaring that "a new imperialist war is imminent."

The resolution attacked embargoes as "an aid to war" and declared that "as soon as an international war begins to shake the American economic empire, the United States Government will move its Army into the field for the defense of the imperialist structure."

Woman Menaced All Year 'Round Granted Divorce

Harris Says Nats Most Improved Club in Loop, Good Bet for 2d

Team Is Best Since 1933 Pilot Thinks

Doyle's Odds of 7-1 Give Bettor the Best of It; Game Rained Out.

Hogan, Weaver, Travis Reasons for Harris' New Optimism.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 30.—Stanley Raymond Harris lifted his nose from a morning paper he had been perusing in the comfort of the hotel lobby upholstery since breakfast, gazed reflectively out of the window toward Orlando's rain-swept main drag and remarked, half to himself:

"H-m-m-m-m-m, I'd like to take a lot of that."

So, very naturally, your correspondent, who was barren of a topic as the heavens were of sunshine, popped the question to the Nats' manager.

"You'd like to take a lot of what?" I asked Harris.

Bucky started as if somebody had been reading his thoughts, folded his paper, stuck it in his pocket, and confessed:

"Why, I'd like to take some of that 7 to 1 that the papers say Jack Doyle is laying against the Washington club to finish second. That's what I'd like to take, some of that 7 to 1."

It was the tip-off on Harris' appraisal of the American League pennant race. Previously, he had been guarded in his statements about the Nats. Off the record, he conceded that the Yankees looked like the class of the league, but down here in Orlando he has developed a great liking for his Washington club.

Bettor Gets Best of It.

"I don't care what those betting commissioners think, our club is overlaid at 7 to 1 to finish second. No matter where we end up, anybody who's got a bet on us to place second at those odds has got the best of the odds, that's what I mean. If I were a betting man, I'd want some of that."

Never since he reinherited the management of the Nats in 1935 has Bucky Harris had such a fondness for the Washington ball club. And his new faith in his team is attributable to three developments here at Orlando:

1. The high-grade protection behind the bat assured by the reconditioned Shanty Hogan.

2. Cecil Travis' apparent adaptability to the vacant shortstop position, and

Most Improved Club.

"To me," added Harris, "it looks as if we're the most improved club in the league. Don't forget we finished only a half game out of second place last season and we didn't have Buddy Myer playing for us then. With Myer in there at second base, we'll be a tough ball club, and if anything happens to the Yankees——"

Harris smiled then and winked characteristically. Always he has prefaced his predictions this spring with "If anything happens to the Yankees——"

That's the tip-off on Harris' regard for his Washington Club. He'll be disappointed if the Nats finish behind second place.

Washington was scheduled to battle Columbus at nearby Deland today, but a day-long rain washed the game off the schedule. It was the first time during the Nats' stay here that rain has interfered with the training program.

Buck Newsom was scheduled to pitch today against the Red Birds, but his arm got a workout despite the rain. Blustering Buck scored a notable victory over the taproom slot machines, pulling the lever all day and being rewarded with a mess of dollar cartwheels in the one-bucky monster.

Nats' 1938 Return Sought by Biloxi

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orlando, Fla., March 30.—A committee of Biloxi, Miss., citizens headed by the Town's mayor and Chamber of Commerce secretary, today called upon President Clark Griffith of the Washington Club and sought to persuade the Nats' return to Biloxi next year for spring training.

Rudolph Is Winner At Pocket Billiards

New York, March 30 (U.P.).—Erwin Rudolph, former world's champion from Cleveland, defeated Onofrio Lauri, of New York, in tonight's first game of the pocket billiard championships. With a high run of 38, Rudolph downed the New Yorker, 125 to 57, in an 11-inning game.

In the afternoon, Bennie Allen, Kansas City, was upset, 125 to 97, by Chuck Seaback, of New York. Joe Diehl, of Rockford, Ill., trounced Willie Mosconi, of Philadelphia, 125 to 68.

Time Is Yanks' Biggest Foe in Pennant Drive

By Charles Grumich.
By the Associated Press.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 30.—The only hope held out by rival American Leaguers is that these slam-bang Yankees can't last forever.

With few exceptions—and the dissenters are remindful of the fellow who whistled through the graveyard—the speculators are ready right now to hand the pennant to the world champion troupe from the Bronx Stadium.

"We will need pitching, of course," says Manager Joe McCarthy, disregarding mention of the hitting as though that were an accepted thing.

"The young pitchers coming up with us look good.

"We expect trouble from Detroit, Cleveland and the Boston Red Sox, but with the right kind of pitching we ought to come through."

With the hitting so well established that it is not on McCarthy's mind, it appears that only pitching, temperament or injury in a serious spot can wreck the Yankees in their bid for a second consecutive pennant.

Temperament, the bugaboo that reared its ugly head in the Boston Red Sox camp and relegated $1,000,000 worth of talent to sixth place last season, is not particularly a factor with the Yankees, Marse Joe is a stern taskmaker, and won't countenance anything of the sort.

Injuries cannot be anticipated, but a few blows in the wrong places—at the infield posts where replacements are lacking or incompetent—might send the Yanks into a tailspin.

Jumping from the problematical to the inevitable, then, it appears that only the old man with the scythe can break up what probably is the greatest set of horsehide harassers ever assembled.

Aged props eventually dropped Babe Ruth out of baseball into the amateur golfing ranks and the old man in the nightgown is creeping up on such Yankees as Second-sacker Tony Lazerri. Pitchers Pat Malone, Bump Hadley and Red Ruffing, and durable Lou Gehrig.

Of these, Lazerri appears destined to be the first to be shelved, although he comes up with some surprising feats just when you figure he can't possibly hang on much longer.

Pat Malone, whose relief pitching (won 12, lost 4) played a big part in the Yankees' triumphs, seems to have two baseball ages—September 25, 1902 (in Who's Who) and 1903 (in the Yankee roster). When a ballplayer begins getting mixed up on the year he was born, he's usually on the far side of the hill . . .

All the record books show Bump Hadley was born July 5, 1904, and he's likely to be valuable for a year or several still. Ruffing is no youngster, as baseball ages go, being 32, but he still has a potent pitching arm and a strong bat, too.

Iron-man Most Valuable Gehrig, who is sure he was born in June, 1903, goes on forever and is good for a few years yet, although it is significant that Col. Ruppert refused to contract him for more than one year.

Turner Offers Steele $15,000 for D. C. Bout

Freddy Steele, world's middleweight boxing champion, yesterday was offered $15,000 to defend his title against Ken Overlin, of Washington, on June 21 at Griffith Stadium.

Joe Turner, promoter, and Goldie Ahearn, matchmaker for Turner's Arena, sent Steele's manager, Dave Miller, a wire offering the champion the match with Overlin, Chrisse Dundee's protege, recently ranked third by the National Boxing Association.

Dave Miller, Manager, Freddy Steele, Lincolnshire Hotel, Takoma, Wash.

Offering you $15,000 (fifteen thousand) with championship privilege for Freddy Steele to defend title here Monday, June 21, against Ken Overlin. This match would draw $40,000 (forty thousand) here. Please answer, if interested. Regards to you, Al and the champ.

(Signed) GOLDIE AHEARN. JOE TURNER.

Dundee's original intentions were to leave in a few weeks for the Pacific Coast to line up a championship bout with the two-fisted Takoma battler, but if the match in Washington goes through, he probably will pass up the Coast trip.

Overlin, in the opinion of veteran boxing observers, is the logical man for a title shot at Steele. Only a few weeks ago Dundee moved his stable of fighters from Richmond to the Nation's Capital, believing he would have a far greater chance of booking his men with topnotch battlers.

Schmeling Home, 'To Sit Back, Wait'

Berlin, March 30 (A.P.).—Max Schmeling, German heavyweight contender, arrived home today from the United States, where he vainly sought to swing a deal whereby he would fight Champion Jimmy Braddock here for the title this summer.

Apparently disgusted by the muddled boxing situation in the United States, Schmeling said he planned to "sit back and let things ripen" before he returns to New York April 22. Recent developments, he said, made him feel sure the Berlin bout still was a possibility, or, failing that, that he still would get his chance at the championship in New York June 3.

Browns Release Three, And Get First Baseman

San Antonio, Texas, March 30 (A.P.).—The St. Louis Browns transferred Ed Coleman, outfielder and leading pinch-hitter in the American League last season, to Toledo of the American Association today in completing a deal for First-Baseman Harry Davis.

The Browns also released Glen Liebhardt on option and Johnny Sams and Charley Petro outright to San Antonio of the Texas League. All three are pitchers.

Snead, Cooper Shoot 63, Tie Jones, Dudley

By the United Press.

Augusta, Ga., March 30.—Former National Open champion Billy Burke, of Cleveland, and long-hitting Jimmy Thomson, Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa., apeared likely candidates to win the masters' golf title today when they toured 18 holes in 69's—three under par—on the eve of the fourth annual classic at Augusta National Golf Club.

Chilly temperatures and overcast skies forced the practice players to bundle up in heavy woolens before showers broke over today's late finishers. Burke and Thomson had identical nine-hole scores—35-34—69 against par 36-36—72.

Most of the day's excitement, however, centered around the best ball match in which Sammy Snead, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., and Harry Cooper, of Chicago, played Ed Dudley, Philadelphia, and Bobby Jones.

They finished all-square. Each side had "best ball" scores of 63. Jones' individual card was 36—36—72, even par. Snead had the best score, 70, with Cooper shooting a 71.

Cooper, leading money winner of the year, has been installed as favorite at 10-1 with Jones who was a 6-1 favorite last year way down the line at 24-1. Next to Cooper is Horton, winner of last week's north and south open at 11-1. Jimmy Hines and Henry Picard are joint third favorites at 12-1.

Ky Laffoon, the Chicago linksman, who was quoted at 40-1 in the winter book, turned in a 65—7 under par—round Monday and his odds immediately tumbled to 14-1. Right behind him were Denny Shute, Gene Sarazen, Tony Manero, Johnny Revolta and Paul Runyan at 15-1.

1,000 See U. S. Pair Win at Table Tennis

By John R. Vosburgh.

Table tennis dressed up in big-time sports garb here last night, causing some 1,000 followers of that modest pastime to shell out more than $1,000 to see America's two leading paddle artists spank the No. 1 and No. 2 players of the world, 3 matches to 2, in the Heurich gymnasium.

Before a gathering which looked like an international conference, 17-year-old Bud Blattner, of St. Louis, the sensation of the evening, and Sandor Glancz, of New York, a naturalized Hungarian, outmaneuvered World's Champion Standa Kolar, of Czechoslovakia, and former champion Laszlo Bellak, of Hungary, in the finest spectacle of ping-ponging that ever rung a staccato out of a local table.

Delegations from the Japanese, Chinese, Czechoslovakian and Hungarian legations were among those whooping it up for the celluloid smashers.

United States Senator Rush D. Holt, attired in a tuxedo, barked out his master of ceremonies role in accomplished fashion, remarking at one time that he wished "all international difficulties could be settled as easily as these table tennis matches."

Thereupon the horn-rim-bespectacled Kolar, a clerk for the Czech government, took the measure of Glacz, a wine merchant, 21-17 and 21-10, to give the Europeans the lead. The youthful Blattner, one of St. Louis' most promising kid baseball players, then evened the account by turning back the bald-headed Bellak, who makes and sells radios in Budapest, 21-19, 18-21 and 21-14.

Bellak regained the lead by disposing of Glacz, 21-18, 18-21 and 21-15, but again Blattner came through to even matters with a 22-20, 21-11 win over the bookish-looking Kolar, who looked anything but the world's champion against the sensation from St. Louis.

With the matches even at two-all, Blattner and Glacz won a smashing doubles victory from Bellak and Kolar, 21-16, 26-28 and 24-22. The foreigners were a point from taking the series at 21-20 when Kolar smashed over the table-end, and it was the same Kolar whose slam outside ended the struggle at 24-22, the second deuced game of the match.

Bo McMillin Gets 10-Year Agreement

By the Associated Press.

Bloomington, Ind., March 30 (A.P.). Following the lead of the University of Texas in granting long-time football coaching contracts, Indiana University decided today to entrust its football fortunes for the next ten years to A. N. (Bo) McMillin.

McMillin, who has directed the Hoosiers to a place in the first division of the Big Ten Conference during two of three years he has been head coach here, signed the ten-year agreement today to replace a previous five-year contract.

Z. G. Clevenger, Indiana athletic director, said the ten-year contract for McMillin would "guarantee Indiana a fine, long-time program."

McMillin, who received all-American recognition as a quarterback for Centre College, Kentucky, came here from Kansas State Agricultural College. In the three years McMillin has instructed Indiana players the team has won more games than it has lost and has not dropped a football contest to Purdue—its traditional rival.

In 1934 and 1935 Indiana defeated the Boilermakers, and last fall the two teams played to a spectacular 20-to-20 tie.

Salary terms of the new contract were not disclosed by the university officials.

"I appreciate the confidence the authorities of Indiana University have in me," McMillin said after signing the contract. "I will try to prove they are not making a mistake in extending me this contract. A long-term contract will be to the best interests of Indiana University football."

In the three years McMillin has been at Indiana his teams have won 12 games, lost 8 and tied 4.

This Morning

WITH SHIRLEY POVICH

Sanford, Fla., March 30.—If you were to haul off and ask Bucky Harris point blank which one particular development of the Nats' training camp this spring has given him the biggest thump, the Washington manager in all truth would doubtless answer:

POVICH.

"Monte Weaver's comeback."

Sure, Shanty Hogan is amply filling what had been that aching void behind the bat, Cecil Travis has been positively sensational at his new shortstop post and Syd Cohen has seemingly graduated into something of a pitcher, but Harris would still say, characteristically:

"How about that Weaver?" He would be putting the question, but it would be his way of declaring that Weaver truly merits praise.

The tall, professorial-looking Weaver of the thinning pate and serious mien represented the long-shot hope of Harris when the Nats pitched camp here and the growing conviction that he is going to pay off has been thrilling the Nats' manager.

"I feel like holding my breath," Harris admitted today. "If it's true that Monte's going to stage a comeback, it'll be the biggest thing that's happened to the Washington team since we came up with Buddy Lewis at third base."

When the Nats went into training here, Harris hadn't dared to believe that Weaver could regain his 1933 form when he was the prize pitcher of the league. Monte had been a failure every season since, and only the fact that he was a $25,000 investment caused Clark Griffith to hang onto him.

But in those early scrub games, Weaver did better than a tolerable turn on the mound. The hard-bitten Harris, however, placed not too much credence in those exhibitions, and awaited his showing against major league opposition. Monte did one creditable performance in an early exhibition game and then he started against the St. Louis Cardinals.

As Weaver moved along in his five-inning turn against the Gas House Gang, mowing down the Cards in one-two-three order and allowing only one hit, Harris be-

Every Car Today Is A Good Car

The public knows that this is true. Every car builder, distributor, dealer and salesman knows it. And the makers of the Cord Front Drive know it.

We fully appreciate the fact that the fine cars of today could never have won their present strong followings if they had not been good cars. But today every motor car is specifically designed, built and bought to fill a definite need.

So trying to compare motor cars is as futile as trying to compare railroad tickets. A ticket to San Francisco, to the man who doesn't want to go to San Francisco, is utterly worthless.

The Cord Front Drive fills a very specific and growing need. The Cord competes with no other motor car—just as your mashie, driver or putter do not compete with any other club in your bag. See and drive a Cord.

Jockeys Escape as Another Spill Marks Tropical Park Race

Vesseli and Sarno Only Shaken Up

Impromptu Hurts Man; Jockey Litzenberger Refuses to Ride.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, March 30.—Coming right on top of a bad spill the previous day, which resulted in Jockey Joe Renick suffering a broken collarbone and Joe Rosen being badly stunned and cut over one eye, local patrons received another scare here this afternoon when two horses fell with their riders in a jam shortly after the start of the third race, a 6-furlong dash for maiden fillies and mares.

The Almont Stable's Jamesville went down with the little New York apprentice, Mike Sarno, while Mrs. J. Houston's Nogalo fell with A. Vesseli. The latter regained his feet, but Sarno, who has been gaining many admirers at the current meeting, failed to rise for a few minutes. However, reports from the track first-aid station were that neither boy was more than severely shaken up and bruised. Sarno, momentarily knocked out, recovered shortly.

Before the running of the second race, the fractious 6-year-old gelding Impromptu, which Eddie Litzenberger refused to ride after taking the mount onto the track, broke loose from his substitute jockey, W. G. Jackson, and made for the paddock gate. The crazy acting animal knocked down the wooden rail separating the track from the paddock path and an elderly gateman, Dan Havley, of Miami, was felled in the rush. He seemed all right, but it was later reported that he suffered a broken collarbone and was taken to Jackson Memorial Hospital.

As the two horses went down following the start of the third dash, Proximity, the favorite, stumbled but recovered and went on to win a length in Marshall Field's colors. The 3-year-old daughter of Stimulus paid $3.40 for $2 and gave Jockey Wayne Wright two straight scores. Wee Colleen, the early pacemaker, saved the place by four lengths from Comeda.

Bomar Aces To Race at Bowie Meet

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Bowie, Md., March 30.—Admiral Cary T. Grayson, of Washington; Bomar Stable, of Detroit; Leo J. Marks and Mose Lowenstein, of Kentucky; J. B. Belk, of Virginia, and L. H. Nimkoff, of New York, will race their horses at the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association's nine-day spring meeting, which opens Thursday.

The veteran Max Smart will bring the Grayson horses over from the Benning race track on the outskirts of Washington. Smart has 20-odd head for Admiral Grayson, including some fast-stepping 2-year-olds.

R. Emmett Potts, of Baltimore, Md., who wintered the division of the Bomar Stable at Pimlico, has shipped here. Siam and Gold Band, a pair of Kentucky Derby eligibles, are the top 3-year-olds in Potts' care. They have been working briskly and will be given a tightener before going West for the $50,000 Derby event.

Willie Saunders, who rode to fame aboard Omaha in the 1935 Kentucky Derby, has signed a contract to ride this year for the Bomar Stable. He is a welcome additton to the local jockey colony and will be handled by Richard Dickman, who will also look after Bobby Morris, another of the Bomar Stable's pilots.

Mose Lowenstein, astute conditioner of thoroughbreds, will handle his own as well as Leo J. Marks' horses.

Former Jockey Elmer Trueman, of Washington, who wintered his wife's horses at Benning, will also be on hand for the opening of the 1937 Eastern racing season. Trueman has a knack of winning first out with his horses, which is something turfites will do well to remember.

Another former rider, namely Mose Simon, will strive for purses during the approaching meeting. Simon is handling the horses of L. H. Nimkoff, of New York, which includes the good handicap thoroughbred Beefsteak.

The 1,200 stalls on the grounds are filling rapidly and all signs point to a full house.

Four stakes will be run during the nine days' sport. The opening headliner is the $5,000 Rowe Memorial, a 6-furlong sprint for 3-year-olds and upward. A pair of $1,500 handicaps will be run April 3 and April 7, with the $5,000 Southern Maryland Handicap being the headliner on April 10, closing day of spring racing at this course.

Studies, Not Grid, Worry Pixlee

G. W. Coach Is Pleased With Drills

Kaufman, Star Back, on Probation; Schedule Is Completed.

After a week of intensive spring training for his George Washington University gridmen, Coach Jim Pixlee doesn't know whether lady luck is smiling or frowning upon him, and has good reasons for his bewilderment.

All in all, the 1937 Colonial squad should be more formidable than last year's and more abundantly supplied with reserves, if a week of spring practice is any criterion. But, on the other hand, Pixlee has no assurance that he will go into the first game with his squad intact. There is a little matter of textbooks and marks looming forebodingly before his boys.

Kaufman on Probation.

Joey Kaufman, ace halfback of last season's eleven and touted as an all-American, is one of those in close proximinity to the danger zone. Kaufman is on probation at the moment and only a couple of barrels of midnight oil, a couple of months of midnights and intensive work on his part wil get him over the hurdle.

Under a scholastic code adopted two years ago by the downtown school students must maintain an average grade equal to that of the average student to remain in good standing. Kaufman entered school before its adoption and since the rule is retroactive, grades made before its adoption must be brought up to the new standard.

The trouble with nine-tenths of those on probation, as Pixlee points out, is laziness. They simply can't be made to study, it's not that they can't carry the work. The coach has his fingers crossed in the matter, but is expecting the worst.

Schedule Is Complete.

George Washington's football schedule is complete, with the exception of one date, that immediately before the Alabama game, and will be announced within the next two weeks. Pixlee is looking for a team using Alabama's system for the date, but it can't be too tough, nor too easy. Teams of that type are mighty hard to find. In the event that one is not contacted, it will be left open and the freshmen will be met on that day.

This Morning:

"How about that Weaver?" he wanted to know in his strange way of putting a question to declare his own feelings on a particular subject. "How about him?" he repeated, for emphasis.

And Bucky had license to get a thrill out of that one-hit performance. Monte was throwing a fast ball that he had repossessed from 1933, when the hop on the Weaver fast one was anathema to all American League hitters. And he had control, and he was throwing a pretty fair curve, too.

"Gee!" added Harris, "What a break to the club that would be if Monte comes through for us. Why, he's a ready-made pitcher. If that guy has his stuff with him this year DeShong and Newsom and Appleton and the rest of 'em may have to take a back seat. Monte's class when he's right.

"Hell, I'll let these rookies go by the boards if Monte comes through. Monte knows how to pitch. You can't say that about the young fellows. Monte's been a great pitcher, and he's still young. No reason why he shouldn't have his stuff with him still. You don't pick up pitchers like Monte used to be once in five seasons. What a threat he's made us."

If, perchance, Weaver does regain that hop on his fast one, Harris owes a profound vote of gratitude to Trainer Mike Martin, who weighed Monte in at 148 when he reported to Orlando and is now fixing the scales at 158 before he can achieve a balance.

Martin has talked Weaver out of the vegetarian diet to which he was committed a few seasons past. Unbeknown to the Nats' trainer, Weaver had given up all meats for a full season. Not until it was reported to Martin that Monte had attended a lecture by a famed vegetarian at the Biloxi camp in 1935 did the Nats' trainer take him in hand.

"I ordered him off that foolish diet of his. You can't pitch in the big leagues on vegetables," commented Martin. "Those pitchers need meat, good healthy meat, if they want to go nine innings. The only trouble with Weaver was loss of strength. Put 10 pounds on him and he's a swell pitcher. But at under 150 he's a set-up and those hitters will lay back and murder that fast ball of his."

In Short—

Clark Griffith took a bow after buying Weaver from the Baltimore Orioles in 1932 at the fag-end of the season . . . he paid $25,000 for the lean right-hander and then saw him beat the White Sox, 4-1, in his big league debut. . . . Griffith had personally scouted Weaver and passed opinion on him before making the purchase . . . and his opinion was justified in 1933 when Weaver helped the Nats to the pennant by winning 22 games and losing only 10 . . . two left-handed pitchers owe their berths in the American League to their mastery of the Washington Club. . . . Fritz Ostermueller, of the Red Sox, won only four games last year—all from Washington . . . and Thornton Lee, formerly with Cleveland, but now with Chicago, had the same record. . . . Joe Cronin pulled a managerial stratagem the other day at Sarasota in a scrub game between two Red Sox teams. . . . Cronin's team was trailing in the last inning and the opposition walked the catcher to get a chance to pitch to the pitcher . . . whereupon Cronin crossed 'em up by calling the convalescent Jimmy Foxx from the stands, sending him to the plate as a pinch-hitter in civilian clothes and watching him win the ball game with a well-spanked hit to left field.

All-American Tackle Reminisces

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Leo Raskowski, husky 210-pound all-American tackle at Ohio State in 1927, and line coach at G. W. in 1931, draped his towering 6-foot-3 frame over a neighboring chair, and reminisced on 14 years of football playing on gridirons from coast to coast.

The Cleveland high school product has adopted Washington as his home after taking a job in the House postoffice. He had played with the St. Mary's Celtics the two previous years, is interested in local high school football and is one of those rare D. C. fans that roots for both Georgetown and George Washington.

He won unanimous all-high acclaim in the midwestern city in 1923. Three years later, at Ohio State, Collier's selected him at a tackle post on its all-American, and the following season he played in the East-West game in San Francisco.

As Western conference rules automatically make a participant in that game a professional, Raskowski made the most of it. He played with the Asheville (Ky.) team in the Tri-State League in 1929.

He then left the South for a fling at big time pro ball, and played at one time or other with the Philadelphia Eagles, Staten Island pros, the Pittsburgh Pirates and Brooklyn Dodgers.

A yen for coaching established him at G. W., where he tutored the local linesmen for a year. A pro coaching job where you can deal in the tricks of the trade and get gray hairs teaching fundamentals is his ambition.

Unlike many sports greats, Raskowski has definite ideas on the best men he has played with and against. In pro ball he names Ken Strong as the perfect back, and the toughest hombre he ever tackled, or missed, he says, was Tiny Hewitt, former University of Michigan luminary and now Chicago Bear end.

Topping the performances that stick in his mind is the game that newspapers booked as, Michigan 21, Raskowski, 0. He played that game, at least his name was in the line-up but he was out for three quarters. Not until late in the last period when he was gently booted in the eye did he come to enough to find himself the hero of some 50,000 persons.

Leo was unfortunate in playing or losing teams, on his fame might have been greater. It was another 21-to-0 defeat, this time at the hands of Princeton, that caused Grantland Rice to shower flowery phrases upon his defensive play. The writer was particularly enthusiastic about a triple pass play he broke up and threw for a 34-yard loss.

His main reason for getting out of pro football was the underpaying of linesmen, while the backs drew the high pay checks. The husky Ohio State star couldn't see any reason for this. He has escaped unscathed in pro football but wears a nose twice broken in college contests.

The burly linesman's weight is within 5 pounds of his college days figure, and except for endurance Leo could go in right now and play with the best.

Workouts in the House gymnasium at volley, handball and basketball keep him near the top of condition. Congressmen Matthew J. Merritt, of New York, and Emmett O'Neal, of Louisville, Ky., provide him with stiff opposition.

George Marshall, who will display the Washington Redskins to the pro football public here next fall, would be encouraged by Raskowski's views that the game will take here if given a year or two to gain a foothold. He also predicts a big future for the Dixie League if it adopts the wide-open game used in the major leagues.

He has taken an interest in the scholastic game in Washington and thinks the high schools are passing up a good bet by playing on days and at times when few people are able to see the games. Midwest teams play at night and on Fridays and Saturdays.

As a parting crack, Raskowski deplored the gymnasium construction for high schools and colleges, boys' clubs, etc.

Although a good job in the postoffice on the hill will keep him out of big-time football, his love for the game will probably put him in local stadia next fall, playing for some pro team that wants a tackle who can really tackle.

POST NOTES ON Fishin' BY BILL ACKERMAN

ACKERMAN

Most as many and varied as the types of salt-water anglers are those that follow the stream. The boy with the well-known bent pin, the liver and worm fisherman, the city dweller who aspires to experience for himself the thrills lurking in the talk of seasoned veterans, the novice who, because of some little instruction and given the right kind of breaks, manages, in addition to having a lot of fun, to get some few fish, and last, that acme of perfection, the dry-fly angler.

Opening day finds him deep in the mountains on some favorite stream, as will any other day that he can spare from everyday duties. Intolerant of the more plebian ways of taking his adversary, he uses the lightest of rods with leaders of gossamer fineness. He knows his streams, most of them as well as he does his own home; knows of the big trout and their favorite pools, knows the slow manner of approach and correct presentation of his lure.

To novices and strangers, this column might be of some help, but for the fly fisherman, Post Notes are superfluous. For him there is only a question.

Are you going to unfold the secrets of the stream for some friend, some member of the family, or maybe some youngster of the neighborhood, who will follow your precepts in later years to be an everlasting credit to your kindness? True it will cut down some of your hours of enjoyment, but what a feeling of satisfaction it will give to know you have made the right kind of fisherman, one from your own mold.

Word comes from Cottie Willard's camp on Fishing Creek that he is filled up for opening day, but quite a few do not expect to stay over the week-end, so that it might be possible to get a reservation then. If Frank Weddle, at the foot of the dam, is also filled up, the next best bet is the camp at Thurmont or one of the hotels in Frederick.

Little Hunting Creek, unlike Big Hunting and Fishing creeks, which are on the watershed and municipally owned, is on private property. Permission to fish below the road has been cheerfully granted in the past. That it may continue so, be sure to obtain it, and conduct yourself as a sportsman should while fishing it.

Notes on more stream, this time in the Youghiogheny section of western Maryland: In the Youghiogheny there is no fishing below Swallow Falls until July 1. The Little Youghiogheny, Herrington Creek and Dunkard Lick Run, are close together and reached by the road leading west out of Oakland. All fine trout water and regularly stocked by the State.

In this section of the State, and particularly in Garrett County, almost any mountain stream is worth a trial. But don't expect your car to take you right to the good water. Roads are few and far between. The best of them are reached by walking in.

Western Five Off For N. Y. Tourney

Ready to head North today for the Eastern States interscholastic basketball tournament at Glens Falls, N. Y., Western High was notified yesterday that it had drawn the crack Morristown, N. J., High five as its first round opponent. The game will be played at 7 p. m. tomorrow.

Morristown has won 23 of 26 games this year and is considered the strongest team in New Jersey. Coach Cliff Moore, nine players and Manager Bill Feiker will leave at 4 p. m.

After Western's game St. Peters, of Worchester, Mass., prep school champs of Massachusetts, will face Et. Mary's of Glens Falls. The other first round games take Baldwin High of Long Island against Utica Free Academy, Central New York champions; and Scarborough Prep School of the Hudson Valley against Brown Prep, of Philadelphia, the defending champions.

Vermont First Foe Of Navy 9 Today

Annapolis, Md., March 30.—In the opening game of Navy's nine tomorrow against the University of Vermont, Head Coach Marty Karow expects to try out Joe Eliot, Frank McKay and Jerome Bruckel on the slab. The latter was a plebe last year and shows much promise. Jamie Adair and Eddie O'Herron will do the catching.

Karow has shifted Alan McFarland, last year's second baseman, to the initial sack, and will pick the rest of the infield from Jack Pace, Lem Cooke, Al Sbisa and Howard Thompson.

COFFEY SALES NINE MEETS.

An important meeting of the Coffey Sales baseball team will be held tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock at 1402 Fourteenth street northwest. Candidates for the team are invited to attend, as there will be several vacancies this year, due to the fact that several of last year's men have gone to the minors.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively,
A Special Correspondent.

Late Rise in Steel and Rail Shares Advances Averages; Cotton Higher.

New York, March 30.—Except for a spurt this afternoon, this market did not break far away from the narrow trading area in which it had been moving since last Thursday. There was much more interest in the commodity markets, where cotton gained $2 a bale, wheat a cent a bushel and where copper prices soared to a new high since 1929. Government bonds were easier.

Until the third hour there was nothing in the trading to make this market any more animated than yesterday's. In fact, transactions up to 1 o'clock were unchanged from the total for the like period Monday. Steel common opened at 118⅞, a gain of ¼ point, but it soon dipped more than a point. Other outstanding issues like General Motors, Consolidated Edison, Chrysler, New York Central, Chesapeake & Ohio and Texas moved within a narrow range of previous closing prices.

During the three-hour period of indifferent trading which preceded a late burst of activity and firmness, there were many cash transactions which lacked explanation other than that the delivery day for stock sold "regular way" today is the first day of the second quarter. One explanation might be that investment trusts were doing some window dressing for their quarterly statements. Cash sales were frequent in Chrysler, Du Pont, Continental Can, Douglas Aircraft, Sears, Roebuck, First National Stores, General Motors and National Steel.

Railroad and steel shares led the upturn, which became most pronounced in the last hour. During this period Steel which had been fluctuating within a range of a point or so advanced to above 123 for a gain of more than 4 points on the day. Bethlehem followed with a gain of about 4 points. Rails gained a point or more, with Central, Santa Fe and Southern Pacific leading.

Metals, especially silver stocks, were up 1 to 2 points, United States Smelting crossing 100. Kennecott and Anaconda were up about 2 points. Motors, oils, sugars and fertilizers were well taken. Utilities continued to scrape bottom. Western Union responded to the good earnings statement with a 2-point gain. Homestake dipped sharply. A thin market in a number of preferred issues was responsible for wide declines on light offerings.

International Paper.

There was nothing in the form or text of Mr. Landis' questions in the International Paped & Power hearing to convey the idea that he was criticizing the proposed recapitalization plan. In fact, the chairman sounded much like an interlocutor, asking questions and knowing all the answers in advance. The responses of the International's vice president were manifestly for purpose of record. In taking this route toward capital reorganization International is blazing a trail. Having applied to SEC for authority, the company will send to stockholders along with its own proposal a copy of the report SEC makes. It is not expected that the security holders will be addressed for two or three weeks more.

Deposit Shrinkage.

The weekly reporting banks in their March 24 figures revealed further large decreases in reserves, which were down $215,000,000. The decreases were caused largely by heavy shrinkage in deposits, which reflected further income tax payments, withdrawals by banks and a net decrease of $64,000,000 in Government deposits. Demand deposits shrank $205,000,000, nearly half of it in the New York district, while balances of domestic banks were down $201,000,000, of which $98,000,000 was in the New York district. Balances with domestic banks decreased $112,000,000, partly offsetting the decrease in deposits of domestic banks. Cash in vault increased $12,000,000.

Meeting the Drain.

To meet the deposit losses while small gains continued in loans other than those to brokers, the banks again disposed of Government securities in a big way, even after making full allowance for the Government bill maturity which was met in the period without refundings. The decrease in bank holdings of Government securities for the country as a whole was $132,000,000, of which $75,000,000 was in the New York district and $34,000,000 was in Chicago. The banks also liquidated $8,000,000 Government guaranteed securities and a like amount of other securities.

Treasury Bills.

The inevitable happened in the Treasury bill market. The discount for nine months' paper having advanced to 0.711 per cent, which is a rate at which banks can make a satisfactory profit, the demand broadened. The total of bids for this series was with two exceptions the largest since October 14. The average rate was 0.843 per cent. On the shorter series also bids were more numerous and larger, but the rate was slightly higher.

Utility Financing.

The effect of the proposed Illinois Power & Light recapitulation plan will be to transfer common stock of this operating from an intermediate holding company into the hands of the subsidiary's preferred stockholders, with the eventual aim of financing plant additions through the sale of common stock. The old notion that holding companies can obtain funds on easier terms than operating subsidiaries died with the passage of the public utility act.

Cotton and Rubber Reach New Peaks

New York, March 30 (AP).—Cotton and rubber soared to new recovery peaks on brisk demand in futures markets today. Cotton options surged forward for gains of more than $2 a bale, in some deliveries, to the highest levels since 1930. Rubber futures again swept ahead, influenced partly by strength in London. Gains in this staple ran from around .30 to .39 of a cent a pound.

250 Expected At Convention Of Bankers

T. S. Holland Will Head Committee in Charge of Transportation.

The appointment of T. Stanley Holland, trust officer, American Security & Trust Co., as chairman of the transportation committee for the coming convention of the District of Coluumbia Bankers Association, at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., May 27-31, was announced yesterday by Thomas J. Groom, acting president of the Bankers Association.

W. T. Vandoren, former National Bank examiner, and now vice president and cashier of the Liberty National Bank, has been named vice chairman, and the following bank officials have been named members of the committeee: Clarence F. Burton, president, City Bank; J. Frank White, president National Bank of Washington; James A. Soper, vice president and cashier, Lincoln National Bank; William B. Willard, vice president, National Savings & &Trust Co.; C. F. Jacobsen, cashier, National Metropolitan Bank; Nelson B. O'Neal, assistant vice president, Riggs National Bank; Aubrey O. Dooley, assistant trust officer, Hamilton National Bank.

Chairman Holland reported today a marked increase in the number of reservations received so far this week. It is now believed that this year's convention will be much larger than last year. If last year's mark is exceeded, the convention will be the largest since the depression. It is expected that around 250 members and prominent Government officials and other guests will attend.

Heretofore it has been the custom to leave White Sulphur Springs on a late night train, arriving in Washington early the next morning. However, this year, it has been decided to afford the members and guests an opportunity to view the beautiful mountain scenery en route; therefore, contrary to custom, the bankers will depart from White Sulphur at 4:30 p. m. on the closing day of the convention, arriving in Washington around 10:30 p. m. the same evening.

New York, March 30 (AP).—Cotton rallied $1.50 to more than $2.50 a bale today on renewed Wall Street buying prompted partly by firm foreign commodity markets. July sold up from 14.11 to 14.59 and closed at 14.55, with final prices 26 to 50 points higher.

W. H. Evans, manager of the Delaware - Maryland - District of Columbia sales division of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, announced today a substantial pay increase, effective April 1, for clerical and other salaried employes of the company in the division. Some 900 employes will benefit.

The raises, Mr. Evans said, were coincidental with a series of pay increases negotiated with thousands of wage-earners in joint conferences with the management.

Corn Shortage Lifts Prices To 9-Year Top

Rise Is 4 Cents a Bushel; Wheat and Other Grains Advance.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 30.—Frightened by unusual dearth of offerings and virtual exhaustion of Chicago supplies, traders short of corn to meet May delivery contracts whirled prices skyward today.
